—Water Company Showing.

The "Evening Telegraph" of Philadelphia last Wednesday published the following interview with Robert Caldwell, Superintendent of Gettysburg Water Company:

Fearing that the great demand for water caused by the presence here of the National Guard will prevent the water from being properly filtered, the Gettysburg Water Company, which supplies the town and the camp, has notified the residents to boil all drinking water.

The investigation of the wells on the maneuver grounds by the State Health Department has led to the issuance of orders that all guardsmen before leaving camp on maneuvers or exercises shall fill the canteens with the town water, and under no circumstances to drink the water from springs or wells away from the camp. It is the opinion that many farmers do not properly clean their wells, and that as a result the water becomes laden with disease-breeding germs.

That the water company does not fear that the water will cause an outbreak of any disease as the result of the increased demand was declared by Robert Caldwell, the superintendent, who said that the residents were requested to boil the water simply as a precaution. He declared that the addition of the camp was greatly taxing the resources of the filtration department, and that everything was being done to prevent the water from going contaminated into the supply pipes.

"As a precaution the company has notified all residents to boil the drinking water," said Superintendent Caldwell. "We do not fear that any disease germs will get into the water after it passes the filter, but our plant is taxed to its utmost to provide sufficient water to meet the needs of the town and guardsmen, and we are taking no chances."

The average amount of water used daily in the town of Gettysburg is 400,000 gallons. At the present time, with the amount required to supply the needs of the guardsmen at Camp Gobin, the daily output averages 600,000 gallons. The filter at the plant of the Gettysburg Water Works has a daily capacity of 300,000 gallons of water, and it is therefore necessary for the company to filter by a chemical process the additional 300,000.

To keep the supply up to the requirements of the town, with its 4,000 residents and the camp with its 8,000 citizen soldiers, it is necessary to keep the pumps running day and night. The company has a reservoir with a capacity of 1,000,000 gallons. The pumping station is four and a half miles southwest of the town, and the water is drawn from Marsh Creek, a mountain stream.

Germs, according to Superintendent Caldwell, are found in greater numbers in water during the months of July and August than at any other time and for this reason, and because of the additional demand created by the guardsmen, extraordinary precautions are being taken.

Story of a Sword.

The widow of Col. R. P. Roberts of the 140th Pa. Regiment was a guest of the Eagle Hotel last week and she told a very interesting story of her husband at the battle of Gettysburg. Col. Roberts led his regiment into the fight at the wheatfield early in the afternoon of July 2, 1863, and was killed while gallantly leading his men, falling at the foot of the wheatfield. Col. Roberts had been most active in mustering in his regiment and before the regiment left home the citizens of Beaver presented him with a handsome sword upon which his name was engraved. This sword he carried into the fight at the wheatfield. When his body was recovered after the fight was over it had been stripped of the uniform and the sword was missing. Later after the battle of the Wilderness, when the Union details were gathering the bodies of the dead and burying them, they found a dead Confederate officer and he was wearing the sword of Col. Roberts. The detail took the sword and finding the name of the officer engraved thereon, sent it to his family and today the sword lost at the Loop at Gettysburg and recovered at the Wilderness, is one of the most treasured keepsakes of the Roberts family.

CAMP A THING OF THE PAST THE DIVISION FOUGHT BATTLE NEAR THE ROUND TOPS.

Grea. Review—Special Stunts—A Number of Accidents and Breaking of Camp.

Now that the last of the wearers of the khaki suits have disappeared it may not be dangerous to recall the remarks of Bob Burdette about this same uniform. He insists that a man must love his country with a love that is worship before he would consent to appear in public in what is a nonsuit. A man must hate to wear it when he is not digging at a fortification or grooming a horse. His trousers are a cross between the riding trousers of an English fox hunter and the trunks of a pugilist. His jacket, with its clumsy fit and flapped pockets, was copied, with certain modifications, from the military uniform of the old Pennsylvania "wampus" which was made by the mother of the family with the economical design of having it fit all the male members of the family without alteration, and he might have added that the distinguishing feature between the private and an officer was the music rolls the latter wore on each leg. Bob says, "there is nothing that puts a chester attitude on a man better squares his shoulders and nerves his soul for brave deeds, than well selected and perfectly fitting clothes." From the clothes point of view the recent camps couldn't be called a success and it is possible that there wouldn't have been any cause of complaint about the conduct of the Guards while off duty in town if they had been garbed in other than boisterous clothes.

Best Camp Ever Held.

Camp Gobin, however, from every other point of view is said to be the best camp ever held by the National Guard of Pennsylvania. At the conclusion of the inspection of the three brigades last week Governor Stuart declared that "the militiamen of Pennsylvania are nearing the point of perfection. These young men are all employed at their several vocations throughout the year, yet they can come here for eight days during the summer and display training which regular army officers here speak of in the highest terms. I am perfectly satisfied and also delighted at the National Guardsmen and their encampment."

Major General Wendell P. Bowman, commanding the division, in speaking of the encampment said:

"It gives me a great deal of satisfaction that everything has worked out with such precision. I am thoroughly pleased with the work of the division. There are no soldiers who could have worked better, with more enthusiasm or with more intelligence than they have worked in this camp at Gettysburg. The division is in splendid shape."

"It is a great credit to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and an honor to the service. Every man and officer in the division has a right to be jealous of its character and standing, and they have no reason to regret their part in its achievements. This Government has a better military policy today than ever before in its history, and Pennsylvania, in my judgment, has the honor of taking the lead in working up to the advance line in the development of that policy."

"I do not believe there is any department in the Federal Government or in any State Government that is more thoroughly, more carefully, more honestly or more efficiently managed than the military department of Pennsylvania. It only remains for the officers and men to keep up the work, and not relax in their efforts along the lines now well established. The only regret I have is I am not just beginning in the good work."

Big Battle of Division.

After the Guards had been given instructions in fighting by regiments and brigades, the big fight of the week was pulled off on Tuesday afternoon of last week, the division being divided into two armies and the fight taking place near Round Top and it was witnessed by Governor Stuart and his staff and hundreds of spectators from Little Round Top and other points.

The army of blue was commanded by General W. H. Hulings and the army of red by General James B. Corryell, the former being largely from the western part of the State and the latter from the eastern part. Each army contained over 4,000 men and they were equipped for regular warfare and each militiaman carried 35 rounds of ammunition. According to the regular army umpires three thousand men were counted out of the contest as killed.

The army of blue marched out the Emmitsburg road and the red army the Taneytown road and neither General knew where he would meet the enemy. General Hulings of the blue army finally selected a position near the Round Tops and the Engineer Corps immediately became busy constructing trenches behind which the infantry made their stronghold and while this was being done the Signal Corps established a line of communication from outposts to headquarters.

Shortly after the army of blue sighted the approach of the army of red the latter located the outposts of the former. General Corryell tried as a ruse dispatching his whole headquarters flag away to the left but the ruse failed to mislead.

As the army of red neared the trenches at a signal the carbines of the entrenched army of blue cracked in unison and the battle was on. The guns of two batteries roared, the attacking infantry fired, ran forward, dropped on their knees, then took positions behind boulders and trees, and the umpires counted out entire companies as being either killed or mortally wounded. Some of the "dead ones" tried to return to the battle but had to be signaled out and forced to cease fighting. The battle lasted several hours and the regular army officers congratulated the officers and spoke in high praise of the Guards and their work in the battle.

Review Day.

Notwithstanding the dark clouds of Wednesday a great throng of people, citizens of the town and country and visitors gathered on the parade ground early in the afternoon, but the lowering clouds did not mar the spectacle with any rain and it was only when it was all over and almost dark that a light rain fell for a few minutes.

The review was considered one of the most picturesque ever held and the last that Governor Stuart will hold. At 4.30 the Governor on his prancing steed Dutch, the same animal he rode two years ago, and attired in a frock coat and wearing a silk tie, galloped from division headquarters and the ceremonies of the review began.

The commander-in-chief called the name of Sergeant George Austin of Battery C, of Phoenixville. Sergeant Austin left the line and rode to the Governor, who pinned a gold medal for 39 years service in the Guard on his breast. The medal was the gift of the late General Riley, and was the sixth one to be awarded to men who have spent many years in the service of the National Guard. This medal would have gone to Rev. Daniel Eberly had he lived but a few weeks longer to be present at this encampment. Sergeant Austin helped to organize Battery C, and in his 39 years' service has been on duty at the railroad strikes in 1877, the Homestead riots of 1892, the coal strike of 1902, and that in Hazelton in 1897.

When the honor had been awarded the Governor dashed across the field at the head of his staff and began his last inspection as the regimental bands struck "Hail to the Chief." In a few minutes he had given the signal for the review to start. Major General Bowman then gave signal to march and rode to the point where the Governor was stationed and took position alongside of the commander-in-chief.

Companies A and B of the Signal Corps at the head of the line started marching and it took a full hour for the 8000 Guardsmen to pass in review. Owing to seniority the Second Brigade was the first in line with Major General Willis J. Hulings at the head of the line, followed by the Fourth Brigade in command of Brigadier General James B. Corryell and then came the First Brigade under Brigadier General William Price. In the rear of the infantry followed Battery C and last in line was Squadron B of Cavalry in command of Major F. M. Ott. The review as a whole was a thrilling spectacle and a number of our people who have seen many reviews declared that it was the finest ever held here.

Breaking Up Camp.

Thursday morning saw the beginning of the end of Camp Gobin. The Fourth Brigade began packing Wednesday evening and early Thursday morning the entraining began and a few hours after sun-up saw the last of this brigade on its way home on the Reading railroad. Friday morning the Second Brigade followed suit. Friday evening the last of the delightful band concerts took place in the camp of the First Brigade and that night many in this brigade had quietly folded their white tents and slept in "doggies" and in the early morning took train. The provost guard doing duty in Gettysburg hiked for camp about 8 o'clock Saturday morning to catch train and was the last seen of the guards except for small details left on field to take charge of clearing up camp ground. On Thursday and Friday after the Fourth Brigade had gone the guards remaining were given instruction in battle maneuvers, the problems in smaller bodies than on the big battle day.

Governor Stuart took his departure on Thursday evening. There was no official ceremony at his leave taking, such as marked his coming to camp, when a Governor's salute was fired. He simply left his tent by the rear flap in going and hurried to his train.

Special Army Stunts.

Scientific demonstrations of the rapidity with which wireless stations can be erected and messages intercepted from and sent to any part of the country were given on a field south of Camp Gobin Thursday afternoon by three musicians of the First Regiment Band of Philadelphia, who have formed a regimental signal corps. Although the men are amateurs, their work was considered by regular officers of the regular army, who were here, to be remarkable. In five minutes time the Philadelphia musicians erected a wireless station with the aerials and other appliances complete. They intercepted messages which were being sent from Cape Hatteras to Baltimore. The sending apparatus was also in operation, but the experimenters were unable to send messages owing to the law, which prohibits amateurs from sending wireless messages or signals.

An interesting demonstration of hospital corps work on a battlefield was given a mile from the camp Thursday morning by the hospital corps of the First Brigade. Men who were supposed to have been wounded were carried a mile to hospital tents, which had been erected in five minutes. Instructions in first aid to the injured were also given.

REGULAR AUGUST COURT ONE CASE FOR TRIAL GOES OVER BY MISTAKE OF JURORS.

The Long Criminal Calendar Disposed of by Pleas of Guilty, No Prosses and Continuations.

Linah's, to the road leading from Chestnut Hill school house to the Bull Valley road a distance of about 3 miles. Said road is out of repair by reason of very little work being done for years, no drainage, brush in places out over the wheel tracks. We have been advised that if road is not repaired and kept so we will lose the rural free delivery service. Should we loose this service we will bring suit against the supervisors for damages. The matter was referred to the District Attorney for investigation and action.

Disposition of Cases.

The only case to be tried was that of Com. vs. Thad. Warren, charged with larceny of coal upon information of County Detective Chas. H. Wilson. The trial began Monday afternoon, the prosecution being conducted by District Attorney Neely and the defendant being represented by W. C. Sheely, Esq.

The case of the Commonwealth consisted of the evidence of John A. Cox, the agent for the Gettysburg & Harrisburg Railway, showing the receipt of coal cars on Feb. 26 and that they were put on the Round Top switch and the Western Maryland Railroad refused to take one of the cars until weighed and when weighed there was a loss between the weight at mines and when weighed at Gettysburg of over two tons. Chas. H. Wilson then testified that on the night of Feb. 26 he had gone into the Catholic Cemetery and went to the west side of the Cemetery along the railroad and was within 30 feet of defendant when he got out car and saw him fill a bag with coal and carry the bag away. That the night was dark but he recognized the defendant and he saw him pass under an incandescent light on West street and recognized him again. After cross-examination Commonwealth rested its case.

Policeman Tom O'Reily was called by defense and after testifying to some occurrences of night of Feb. 26 left the stand. W. C. Sheely, Esq., at this point discovered that Daniel Sheely, who had been selected as one of the jurors in case was seated in court room while Joseph Spangler, another juror who had not been chosen was in the jury box and had been sworn. These facts being made known to the Court

Rheumatism

Is A Constitutional Disease.

It manifests itself in local aches and pains—inflamed joints and stiff muscles—but it cannot be cured by local applications.

It requires constitutional treatment, and the best is a course of the great blood purifying and tonic medicine which corrects the acid condition of the blood and builds up the system.

Get it today in usual liquid form or chocolate tablets called Sarsatabs.

GOOD NEWS

Many Gettysburg Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby.

"Good news travels fast," and the thousands of bad back sufferers in Gettysburg are glad to learn that prompt relief is within their reach. Many a lame weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kid-ney Pills. Our citizens are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

Mrs. H. E. Ridinger, 25 Brecken-ridge St., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "I can endorse Doan's Kidney Pills just as highly to-day as I did two years ago when I publically told of their merits. A member of my family was afflicted with backache and at night often had to get up and sit in a chair. The kidneys were weak and there were severe pains throughout the body. Doan's Kidney Pills were fi-nally procured at the People's Drug Store and they brought relief from the first. As their use was continued, a great improvement was noticeable. I was led to try Doan's Kidney Pills by this persons' experience and I am glad to say that I received relief from disagreeable symptoms of kidney trouble that had clung to me for some time. I cannot give Doan's Kidney Pills more praise than they deserve."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

SUDDEN DEATH IN THE BUCHANAN VALLEY.

Death Comes Suddenly to Well Known Persons and With Halting Step to Others.

JOSEPHINE ELIZABETH COLE, youngest daughter of John F. and Jennie G. Cole, died on Thursday morning at 3.35 unexpectedly to all her friends. She had been slightly indisposed from Monday, but there was nothing perceptible to indicate danger of a fatal disease. She was up and walking about, and on Wednesday evening sat at the table and partook of a light supper, but grew worse as the night advanced and at four in the morning showed alarming symptoms of congestion of the lungs and only lived two hours and a half. The entire community was shocked as it was not known that she was ill. She was interred in St. Ignatius' cemetery on Saturday at 3 p. m. The bearers were Blanche Irwin, Esther Dillon, Evelyn Bell and Bertha Hall. She is survived by her parents, John F. and Jennie G. Cole, three brothers, Raymond, Charles and Earl, and five sisters, Misses Genevieve, Evelyn, Ethel, Mary and Loretta Cole. She has but "Gone home by a shorter way." Gone to repose in her early found bliss. Gone from all of this world's trials and struggles, and suffering. God sparing the tender feet lest they be bruised, and torn by the brambles and thorns, that beset life's longer journey, to a home of bliss beyond. The Savior has led her through beautiful paths of light and love into her sure reward of eternal happiness in heaven. In robes emblematical of purity we robe her and placed garlands of nature's fairest flowers as decorations as a preparation for her last resting place and left in God's care.

Notice.

To my many friends, the Farmers of Adams County. I desire to call your attention to fact that I am fully entitled to practice veterinary medicine under Act of 1909 and that the recent case against me ignored that act and proceeded against me for violating Acts of 1899, 1895 and 1905 regarding veterinary registration. The case having been dismissed it should be kept in mind that trouble was sought to be made me on a technicality, and not by reason of any want of skill in my profession or complaint among my patrons, for such has never been the case. It is up to you decide whether you will permit a technicality to take from me any of the fruits of a twenty seven years successful practice.

Sincerely yours, DR. E. D. HUDSON.

DO THE RIGHT THING if you have Nasal Catarrh. Get Ely's Cream Balm at once. Don't touch the catarrh powder and snuff, for they contain cocaine. Ely's Cream Balm releases the secretions that inflame the nasal passages and the throat, whereas medicines made with mercury merely dry up the secretions and leave you no better than you were. In a word, Ely's Cream Balm is a real remedy, not a delusion. All druggists 50 cents, or mailed by Ely Brothers, 56 Warren Street, New York.

Many Gettysburg Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby.

"Good news travels fast," and the thousands of bad back sufferers in Gettysburg are glad to learn that prompt relief is within their reach. Many a lame weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kid-ney Pills. Our citizens are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

Mrs. H. H. Ridinger, 25 Brecken-ridge St., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "I can endorse Doan's Kidney Pills just as highly to-day as I did two years ago when I publicly told of their merits. A member of my family was afflicted with backache and at night often had to get up and sit in a chair. The kidneys were weak and there were severe pains throughout the body. Doan's Kidney Pills were fi-nally procured at the People's Drug Store and they brought relief from the first. As their use was continued, a great improvement was noticeable. I was led to try Doan's Kidney Pills by this persons' experience and I am glad to say that I received relief from disagreeable symptoms of kidney trouble that had clung to me for some time. I cannot give Doan's Kidney Pills more praise than they deserve."

arranged for a conference, which was composed of equal numbers of the close associates of Colonel Guffey and those who had been known as his opponents in recent contests within the party. This conference was held in New York. It was agreed that the Democracy of Pennsylvania could not hope to succeed in the approaching campaign unless factional differences were obliterated and a more effective and harmonious organization perfected. The need for this was apparent to everyone and the only debatable question was that of finding a favorable plan of harmonizing. After much discussion it was finally decided that the best way to bring about the desired result was to have Chairman Dewalt, of the Democratic State Committee, call a meeting of that body at Harrisburg, inviting thereto not only all of the members of the committee, but all of the Democratic County Chairmen, as well as a number of other leading Democrats from different sections of the State. It was then agreed, also, that, at the proposed meeting of the Democratic organization and leaders of Democratic thought at Harrisburg, provision should be made for the appointment of a new committee, whose members should be authorized to enlist the co-operation of all Democrats of Pennsylvania in securing a more effective organization; and, in order that the movement might be general and remove all suspicion of the thought that it was intended; to promote the leadership of any particular individual or faction, it was agreed that this committee should be empowered to solicit contributions to be used in strengthening the organization, and that not more than one hundred dollars should be accepted from any one person to go into the proposed fund.

Because of the fact that much of the factional disturbance among the Pennsylvania Democrats was due to conditions in Philadelphia no one from Philadelphia was present at this New York conference. The participants were Democrats outside of Philadelphia. Subsequently Charles P. Donnelly, of Philadelphia, was told of the meetings that had been held and of the arrangements that had been made to bury past differences within the ranks of the Democracy of Pennsylvania, to reunite the warring interests and re-establish the party by perfecting the organization and strengthening its facilities for fighting the common enemy. Mr. Donnelly, representing the Philadelphia Democracy, approved the plan and agreed to co-operate with Colonel Guffey and his friends and those who had previously been known as his opponents, in bringing about the desired result.

Plan Carried Out

The plan was carried out to the letter. Chairman Dewalt issued the call of the meeting at Harrisburg and it was largely attended. The resolution was presented and adopted appointing a finance committee, headed by Vance McCormick, of Harrisburg, to plan the reorganization campaign and collect the funds—not in excess of one hundred dollars from any one individual—necessary to carry on the work.

Nothing had been said up to this present time by any one interested in the movement on the subject of candidates for the offices to be filled in Pennsylvania this year. Following the Harrisburg meeting, however, there was considerable discussion regarding the most available candidate for Governor. Ex-State Treasurer Berry was already in the field as an active aspirant for the Democratic nomination. Among the friends of Colonel Guffey he was not popular, and this was equally true among many of the earnest Democrats of the State who could not be regarded as followers of Colonel Guffey. The initial reason for the opposition of the Guffey following to Berry for Governor was the attitude of Berry toward the Guffey organization in its opposition to the nomination of Bryan for President in 1908. Many of those who were not followers of the Guffey organization had knowledge of the financial transactions between Colonel Guffey and Mr. Berry during the time the latter was State Treasurer of Pennsylvania as well as of the relations of Mr. Berry while Treasurer to the Harrisburg Trust Company and they felt that if for no other reason, the stories of these deals if made public would discredit the candidacy of Mr. Berry among many people and put the Democratic party on the defensive in the approaching campaign. This latter fact was explained to Mr. Berry as a reason for opposition to him by many Democrats, but he said that he could explain the transactions to the satisfaction of his critics and that they in no way reflected upon his conduct while State Treasurer.

There was a general desire to unite upon some man as a candidate for Governor who could not be regarded as a factionalist. During the previous campaign, as will be remembered, C. La Rue Munson had been the candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court. He had never been active in politics and was not associated with any faction of the party. During the campaign he made a vigorous canvass of the State, visiting every county and making many friends, with the result that when the vote was counted it was discovered that he had carried the State outside of Philadelphia. This result prompted the suggestion from many quarters that he was the most available candidate for Governor and he was urged from all sides to consent to the use of his name for that purpose.

The Slatting of Munson.

As stated, Mr. Munson had not been an active figure in politics. He had never been identified with the so-called Guffey organization; and it was well known that he had become convinced during the campaign of the previous year that this organization, in many of the counties of the State, was worse than useless. Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall, and several of the most important members of the so-called Guffey organization were at first not inclined to favor the candidacy of Munson, but, after a great deal of discussion, and finding that there was a strong feeling among the Democrats of all factions throughout the State in favor of the nomination of Munson, they came to the conclusion that he was the most available candidate, and announced their willingness to support him.

They were influenced to this conclusion largely by the demands from many Democratic county leaders and prospective candidates for the Legislature who urged as a reason for their preference for Munson the fact that he had, as a candidate for the Supreme Court Judgeship, carried their counties, that he had made many personal friends during his canvass and that as a candidate for Governor his leadership would inspire many independent voters anxious to defeat the Penrose machine. This argument, coming from all quarters of the State, finally won Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall and the other chief backers of the Democratic organization, who had, at the beginning, thought of Senator De Walt, of Lehigh, or Senator Grim of Bucks, for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Mr. Munson, at the beginning of the effort to name him for Governor, did not enthuse. The hard work of the previous campaign, together with the results obtained, had disheartened him, and he did not much feel like again becoming a candidate for office and expending more of his time and means in that direction. He finally agreed, however—and so stated publicly—that he would not become an active candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, but that if a majority of the delegates to the Democratic Convention favored his nomination he would accept. Privately Mr. Munson let it be understood that his desires did not run in the direction of the Governorship. He said that his ambition was to become a Judge and frankly stated to those in his confidence that he had already sought, through friends, the aid of Senator Penrose to secure a Federal Judgeship should it be found possible to induce the President to name a Democrat from Pennsylvania.

When this became known, which was when Mr. Munson was first urged to consent to the acceptance of the nomination for Governor and after the leaders had agreed to favor him, it was agreed that should a Judgeship come Munson's way in advance of the Democratic primaries he could honorably accept it, but that once the primaries were held and the delegates to the Democratic State Convention elected with the understanding that Munson would accept their votes, he could not in honor accept a Federal Judgeship should one be offered him.

A Discordant Note.

At the meeting of the Democratic State Committee called to launch the harmony program there was but one discordant note. That was produced by the friends of ex-State Treasurer Berry, who presented a resolution making it possible for candidates for delegates to the Democratic State Convention to state their preference for Governor, afford Democrats an opportunity to instruct the delegates and binding the delegates so instructed to vote as ordered by their constituents. This resolution had no sooner been introduced than it met with opposition, but the harmonizing influence of the occasion prevailed, the opposition was withdrawn and the resolution was adopted.

This made it possible for any Democrat seeking a nomination to set up candidates for delegates at the primaries duly labeled with the name of their preference for Governor. It was a fair proposition and calculated to insure a square deal. Following the meeting only two active aspirants for the Democratic nomination for Governor entered the race. They were ex-State Treasurer Berry and Senator Grim. It was made known, however, and clearly understood that C. La Rue Munson would accept the nomination if it were tendered him. When the primaries were held the delegates set up by Mr. Berry were elected in a number of counties, but failed of election in most cases where uninstructed delegates favorable to Munson were in the field. Senator Grim secured as many if not more delegates than Berry but it is safe to say that on the eve of the Allentown Convention more than 200 of the 500 delegates to that gathering expected to vote for Munson on the following day.

The sensational announcement of the declination of Munson to permit the use of his name shortly before midnight of the day before the convention and the subsequent nomination of Senator Grim is history. The circumstances attending the Munson retirement bred all sorts of suspicions, and appeared to warrant the general conclusion that a despicable trick involving a disreputable deal and intended to demoralize the Democratic party and make easy the election to the Governorship of a tool of the Penrose-Contractors Machine had been perpetrated.

The Munson Fiasco.

The facts of the Munson fiasco, so far as they were supposed to discreditably involve any one prominent in the Democratic organization, are now known. Pains-taking investigation has been made. Nothing has been taken for granted, and all of the circumstantial evidence pointing to duplicity and double-dealing and involving one or more Democrats present at Allentown during convention week, has been proven to be worthless as a means of connecting the Democratic leaders in question with the unexpected declination of Mr. Munson on the eve of the Democratic State Convention. If Mr. Munson was involved in any deal and impelled by any reasons other than those he has publicly stated for his action, it was not with the knowledge of any member of the Democratic organization, and none of whom were in any way responsible for the panic into which the delegates to the Allentown Convention were thrown on the eve of the gathering.

Immediately following the primary elections when it became known that the efforts of Berry and Grim to capture a majority of the delegates to the State Convention had failed, formal pledges of enough delegates to nominate Mr. Munson were made to the Williamsport man. He was given these pledges and assured of the support not only of Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall, Chas. P. Donnelly and their friends, but many other Democrats who had long been known as being out of harmony with the Guffey organization without the request of a single pledge involving the conduct of the campaign or the office of Governor should he win the election. His nomination was assured, and he was consulted regarding the platform on which he was to make the campaign, responding with a series of planks covering questions of State government.

The impression that Mr. Munson was a politician was never justified. He was not. He was a good mixer and an effective personal campaigner, but with little or no knowledge of larger than county politics except that obtained in his canvass of the State in 1909.

The week before the Allentown Convention Munson was impressed by an interview credited to ex-State Treasurer Berry in which the latter was quoted as stating that if he did not get the Democratic nomination for Governor he would run as an independent candidate. That worried Munson. He figured that it was useless for him to take the Democratic nomination if Berry ran independently, as that would divide the Democratic and independent vote, and insure the election of the Penrose candidate.

Munson Deals for Berry

And so Mr. Munson decided to play politics. He came to Philadelphia and conferred with Mr. Berry's manager, Mr. Bonniwell, urging that gentleman to get his man to stop running for Governor and consent to accept a place on the Democratic ticket for Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Bonniwell doubted Mr. Munson's ability to get Mr. Berry the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor, but Mr. Munson said he would try.

Senator Hall, of Elk, was in Philadelphia, and Mr. Munson conferred with him, pleading that Mr. Berry be slated for Lieutenant-Governor. Senator Hall refused to agree to such a proposition. He said that nothing was agreed upon except that Munson was to be nominated for Governor, and it would be up to the Allentown Convention to decide upon the balance of the ticket. Mr. Munson appeared to assume that Senator Hall could handle the office any way he wanted, and threatened to refuse to accept the nomination for Governor if Senator Hall would not agree to favor Berry for Lieutenant-Governor.

To this Hall replied that Munson did not dare take such a step, that the delegates had been elected, and he had promised to accept if nominated, and that he could not get out of the race on the pretext that he would not run if Berry was not on the ticket with him as the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor.

Munson Threatens

Mr. Munson was much wrought up over the situation. The weather was hot, and shortly after the interview with Senator Hall and while on his way to a train he was attacked by vertigo, and became so dizzy that he had to be belted to his seat in a parlor car. His illness continued and did not respond rapidly to the treatment of a Williamsport physician. He left Philadelphia after this conference with Senator Hall on the Thursday previous to the Allentown Convention.

On the following Sunday he again met Senator Hall by appointment at Atlantic City and informed him that the condition of his health worried him; that in addition some private affairs had taken a turn that made it inadvisable for him to continue in politics, and he wished to be relieved of his promise to accept the Democratic nomination for Governor. He asked Hall to acquiesce in this decision and look elsewhere for a candidate for Governor.

Senator Hall positively declined to be a party to any such arrangement, and urged Mr. Munson to hold fast to his original position—that if nominated he would accept the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson persisted and Senator Hall insisted that it was unfair to the Democrats of the State that Mr. Munson should think of declining at that late date. He told him he was unnecessarily alarmed about his health and that he would be all right after a few weeks' rest.

At this point in the interview a close relative of Mr. Munson's who had been present during the interview appealed to Senator Hall to accept the declination of Mr. Munson, urging that to force him to make the campaign for Governor was driving him to the grave, the claim being made by this person, who was in a position to know, that it was a fact that Mr. Munson's physical condition was such that any undue excitement was likely to result fatally.

Senator Hall finally agreed that if this was true it was a valid excuse for the position Mr. Munson sought to assume, but stated that it was his judgment that Mr. Munson could not afford to take it without consulting one of the best-known physicians in the country and having him certify after an examination that it would jeopardize his life to make the campaign for the Governorship.

Mr. Munson agreed to this, and Senator Hall parted with him with the understanding that he was to go to Allentown on Monday while Munson was to visit Dr. Musser in Philadelphia, and communicate the result of the medical examination to Hall at Allentown on Tuesday morning, and that failing to secure the physician's certificate justifying his position he would accept the nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson visited Dr. Musser on Monday afternoon of convention week, with the result already known that he advised him that his condition was such that it would be dangerous for him to engage in any work involving great effort or excitement.

Munson Gets Out.

Mr. Munson reached Williamsport on Monday evening. He immediately wrote and mailed to N. M. Edwards, who was in Allentown, the letter declining the nomination as well as a brief note to Senator Hall telling him to see Mr. Edwards who would show him the letter fully explaining his position.

Senator Hall received his short note from Munson early Tuesday morning. He immediately sought Edwards, who declared he had received no letter. Repeatedly during the day Hall sought Edwards, and as repeatedly Edwards visited the hotel desk and the post office inquiring for the expected letter. Edwards was in thorough ignorance of the contents of the letter, and although he was supposed to be Munson's closest political friend, had received no information of the attitude assumed by Munson.

Late on Tuesday evening a clerk in the Allentown hotel at which Edwards was stopping discovered that there was a letter for Edwards, that the letter had been there all day, but that another clerk had misplaced it in the letter case, which accounted for the fact that it was not delivered earlier.

The rest is history. Panic followed in the ranks of the leaders and their friends. Futile efforts, which consumed several hours, were made through the telephone to induce Munson to recall his letter of declination. It was midnight of the day before the convention when this effort was abandoned because Munson persisted in his refusal to run, and the hasty decision of the Democrats who favored Munson to turn to Grim and nominate him was made.

As stated it was close to midnight on the day before the Allentown convention when the final word was received from Munson that he would not accept the nomination. His letter to N. M. Edwards had been presented to the party leaders shortly after six o'clock, the intervening time until close to midnight being consumed in personal appeals over the telephone to Munson, to withdraw his letter, Colonel Guffey, Senator Dewalt, Chas. P. Donnelly and all of the other leaders on the ground participating in this fruitless effort.

Guffey Favored Berry.

Shortly before midnight there was a conference in Colonel Guffey's room. It was participated in not only by the close friends of Colonel Guffey, who had long been identified with his control of the Democratic organization, but by a number of others. Chas. P. Donnelly, of Philadelphia, suggested Congressman Palmer, of Stroudsburg, as the candidate for Governor and practically every man present agreed that he should be urged to take the place. Mr. Palmer, however, when urged, pointed to the fact that he was already a candidate for re-election to Congress and would not consent to run for Governor. Other names were canvassed, including those of both Berry and Grim. Of all the others considered none was at or near Allentown and it being doubtful that any of them would accept and the convention being only a few hours off the choice finally narrowed down to Berry and Grim, both of whom were candidates and both being in Allentown. Several present who had been opposed to the nomination of Berry suggested taking him, urging that this plan would remove the natural suspicion so apparent under all of the circumstances, that the name of Munson had only been used to trick the voters and that his nomination was never seriously considered by Colonel Guffey and his friends.

Colonel Guffey was inclined to agree to this and said he would if the others took the same view. They did not. Discussion followed of the original objection to Berry on account of the stories of his financial transactions with Colonel Guffey and the Harrisburg Trust Company while filling the office of State Treasurer, and it was finally decided to urge the nomination of Senator Grim, who was not present during any part of the discussion and who did not know of the decision reached until after it had been made.

GOOD NEWS

Many Gettysburg Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby.

"Good news travels fast," and the thousands of bad back sufferers in Gettysburg are glad to learn that prompt relief is within their reach. Many a lame weak and aching back is bad no more thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills. Our citizens are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

Mrs. H. H. Ridinger, 25 Breckenridge St., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "I can endorse Doan's Kidney Pills just as highly to day as I did two years ago when I publically told of their merits. A member of my family was afflicted with backache and at night often had to get up and sit in a chair. The kidneys were weak and there were severe pains throughout the body. Doan's Kidney Pills were finally procured at the People's Drug Store and they brought relief from the first. As their use was continued, a great improvement was noticeable. I was led to try Doan's Kidney Pills by this persons' experience and I am glad to say that I received relief from disagreeable symptoms of kidney trouble that had clung to me for some time. I cannot give Doan's Kidney Pills more praise than they deserve."

arranged for a conference, which was composed of equal numbers of the close associates of Colonel Guffey and those who had been known as his opponents in recent contests within the party. This conference was held in New York. It was agreed that the Democracy of Pennsylvania could not hope to succeed in the approaching campaign unless factional differences were obliterated and a more effective and harmonious organization perfected. The need for this was apparent to everyone and the only debatable question was that of finding a favorable plan of harmonizing. After much discussion it was finally decided that the best way to bring about the desired result was to have Chairman Dewalt, of the Democratic State Committee, call a meeting of that body at Harrisburg, inviting thereto not only all of the members of the committee, but all of the Democratic County Chairmen, as well as a number of other leading Democrats from different sections of the State. It was then agreed, also, that, at the proposed meeting of the Democratic organization and leaders of Democratic thought at Harrisburg, provision should be made for the appointment of a new committee, whose members should be authorized to enlist the co-operation of all Democrats of Pennsylvania in securing a more effective organization; and, in order that the movement might be general and remove all suspicion of the thought that it was intended; to promote the leadership of any particular individual or faction, it was agreed that this committee should be empowered to solicit contributions to be used in strengthening the organization, and that not more than one hundred dollars should be accepted from any one person to go into the proposed fund.

Because of the fact that much of the factional disturbance among the Pennsylvania Democrats was due to conditions in Philadelphia no one from Philadelphia was present at this New York conference. The participants were Democrats outside of Philadelphia. Subsequently Charles P. Donnelly, of Philadelphia, was told of the meetings that had been held and of the arrangements that had been made to bury past differences within the ranks of the Democracy of Pennsylvania, to reunite the warring interests and re-establish the party by perfecting the organization and strengthening its facilities for fighting the common enemy. Mr. Donnelly, representing the Philadelphia Democracy, approved the plan and agreed to co-operate with Colonel Guffey and his friends and those who had previously been known as his opponents, in bringing about the desired result.

Plan Carried Out

The plan was carried out to the letter. Chairman Dewalt issued the call of the meeting at Harrisburg and it was largely attended. The resolution was presented and adopted, appointing a finance committee, headed by Vance McCormick, of Harrisburg, to plan the reorganization campaign and collect the funds—not in excess of one hundred dollars from any one individual—necessary to carry on the work.

Nothing had been said up to this present time by any one interested in the movement on the subject of candidates for the offices to be filled in Pennsylvania this year. Following the Harrisburg meeting, however, there was considerable discussion regarding the most available candidate for Governor. Ex-State Treasurer Berry was already in the field as an active aspirant for the Democratic nomination. Among the friends of Colonel Guffey he was not popular, and this was equally true among many of the earnest Democrats of the State who could not be regarded as followers of Colonel Guffey. The initial reason for the opposition of the Guffey following to Berry for Governor was the attitude of Berry toward the Guffey organization in its opposition to the nomination of Bryan for President in 1908. Many of those who were not followers of the Guffey organization had knowledge of the financial transactions between Colonel Guffey and Mr. Berry during the time the latter was State Treasurer of Pennsylvania as well as of the relations of Mr. Berry while Treasurer to the Harrisburg Trust Company and that felt that if for no other reason, the stories of these deals if made public would discredit the candidacy of Mr. Berry among many people and put the Democratic party on the defensive in the approaching campaign. This latter fact was explained to Mr. Berry as a reason for opposition to him by many Democrats, but he said that he could explain the transactions to the satisfaction of his critics and that they in no way reflected upon his conduct while State Treasurer.

There was a general desire to unite upon some man as a candidate for Governor who could not be regarded as a factionalist. During the previous campaign, as will be remembered, C. La Rue Munson had been the candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court. He had never been active in politics and was not associated with any faction of the party. During the campaign he made a vigorous canvass of the State, visiting every county and making many friends, with the result that when the vote was counted it was discovered that he had carried the State outside of Philadelphia. This result prompted the suggestion from many quarters that he was the most available candidate for Governor and he was urged from all sides to consent to the use of his name for that purpose.

The Slating of Munson.

As stated, Mr. Munson had not been an active figure in politics. He had never been identified with the so-called Guffey organization; and it was well known that he had become convinced during the campaign of the previous year that this organization, in many of the counties of the State, was worse than useless. Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall, and several of the most important members of the so-called Guffey organization were at first not inclined to favor the candidacy of Munson, but, after a great deal of discussion, and finding that there was a strong feeling among the Democrats of all factions throughout the State in favor of the nomination of Munson, they came to the conclusion that he was the most available candidate, and announced their willingness to support him.

They were influenced to this conclusion largely by the demands from many Democratic county leaders and prospective candidates for the Legislature who urged as a reason for their preference for Munson the fact that he had, as a candidate for the Supreme Court Judgeship, carried their counties, that he had made many personal friends during his canvass and that as a candidate for Governor his leadership would inspire many independent voters anxious to defeat the Penrose machine. This argument, coming from all quarters of the State, finally won Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall and the other chief backers of the Democratic organization, who had, at the beginning, thought of Senator De Walt, of Lehigh, or Senator Grim of Bucks, for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Mr. Munson, at the beginning of the effort to name him for Governor, did not enthrust. The hard work of the previous campaign, together with the results obtained, had disheartened him, and he did not much feel like again becoming a candidate for office and expending more of his time and means in that direction. He finally agreed, however—and so stated publicly—that he would not become an active candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, but that if a majority of the delegates to the Democratic Convention favored his nomination he would accept. Privately Mr. Munson let it be understood that his desire did not run in the direction of the Governorship. He said that his ambition was to become a Judge and frankly stated to those in his confidence that he had already sought, through friends, the aid of Senator Penrose to secure a Federal Judgeship should it be found possible to induce the President to name a Democrat from Pennsylvania.

When this became known, which was when Mr. Munson was first urged to consent to the acceptance of the nomination for Governor and after the leaders had agreed to favor him, it was agreed that should a Judgeship come Munson's way in advance of the Democratic primaries he could honorably accept it, but that once the primaries were held and the delegates to the Democratic State Convention elected with the understanding that Munson would accept their votes, he could not in honor accept a Federal Judgeship should one be offered him.

A Discordant Note.

At the meeting of the Democratic State Committee called to launch the harmony program there was but one discordant note. That was produced by the friends of ex-State Treasurer Berry, who presented a resolution making it possible for candidates for delegates to the Democratic State Convention to state their preference for Governor, afford Democrats an opportunity to instruct the delegates and binding the delegates so instructed to vote as ordered by their constituents. This resolution had no sooner been introduced than it met with opposition, but the harmonizing influence of the occasion prevailed, the opposition was withdrawn and the resolution was adopted.

This made it possible for any Democrat seeking a nomination to set up candidates for delegates at the primaries duly labeled with the name of their preference for Governor. It was a fair proposition and calculated to insure a square deal. Following the meeting only two active aspirants for the Democratic nomination for Governor entered the race. They were ex-State Treasurer Berry and Senator Grim. It was made known, however, and clearly understood that C. La Rue Munson would accept the nomination if it were tendered him. When the primaries were held the delegates set up by Mr. Berry were elected in a number of counties, but failed of election in most cases where uninstructed delegates favorable to Munson were in the field. Senator Grim secured as many if not more delegates than Berry but it is safe to say that on the eve of the Allentown Convention more than 200 of the 300 delegates to that gathering expected to vote for Munson on the following day.

The sensational announcement of the declaration of Munson to permit the use of his name shortly before midnight of the day before the convention and the subsequent nomination of Senator Grim is history. The circumstances attending the Munson retirement bred all sorts of suspicions, and appeared to warrant the general conclusion that a despicable trick involving a disreputable deal and intended to demoralize the Democratic party and make easy the election to the Governorship of a tool of the Penrose-Contractors Machine had been perpetrated.

The Munson Fiasco.

The facts of the Munson fiasco, so far as they were supposed to discreditably involve any one prominent in the Democratic organization, are now known. Pinstaking investigation has been made. Nothing has been taken for granted, and all of the circumstantial evidence pointing to duplicity and double dealing and involving one or more Democrats present at Allentown during convention week, has been proven to be worthless as a means of connecting the Democratic leaders in question with the unexpected declination of Mr. Munson on the eve of the Democratic State Convention. If Mr. Munson was involved in any deal and impelled by any reasons other than those he has publicly stated for his action, it was not with the knowledge of any member of the Democratic organization, and none of whom were in any way responsible for the panic into which the delegates to the Allentown Convention were thrown on the eve of the gathering.

Immediately following the primary elections when it became known that the efforts of Berry and Grim to capture a majority of the delegates to the State Convention had failed, formal pledges of enough delegates to nominate Mr. Munson were made to the Williamsport man. He was given these pledges and assured of the support not only of Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall, Chas. P. Donnelly and their friends, but many other Democrats who had long been known as being out of harmony with the Guffey organization without the request of a single pledge involving the conduct of the campaign or the office of Governor should he win the election. His nomination was assured, and he was consulted regarding the platform on which he was to make the campaign, responding with a series of planks covering questions of State government.

The impression that Mr. Munson was a politician was never justified. He was not. He was a good mixer and an effective personal campaigner, but with little or no knowledge of larger than county politics except that obtained in his canvass of the State in 1909.

The week before the Allentown Convention Munson was impressed by an interview credited to ex-State Treasurer Berry in which the latter was quoted as stating that if he did not get the Democratic nomination for Governor he would run as an independent candidate. That worried Munson. He figured that it was useless for him to take the Democratic nomination if Berry ran independently, as that would divide the Democratic and independent vote, and insure the election of the Penrose candidate.

Munson Deals for Berry

And so Mr. Munson decided to play politics. He came to Philadelphia and conferred with Mr. Berry's manager, Mr. Bonniwell, urging that gentleman to get his man to stop running for Governor and consent to accept a place on the Democratic ticket for Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Bonniwell doubted Mr. Munson's ability to get Mr. Berry the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor, but Mr. Munson said he would try.

Senator Hall, of Elk, was in Philadelphia, and Mr. Munson conferred with him, pleading that Mr. Berry be slated for Lieutenant-Governor. Senator Hall refused to agree to such a proposition. He said that nothing was agreed upon except that Munson was to be nominated for Governor, and it would be up to the Allentown Convention to decide upon the balance of the ticket. Mr. Munson appeared to assume that Senator Hall could handle the office any way he wanted, and threatened to refuse to accept the nomination for Governor if Senator Hall would not agree to favor Berry for Lieutenant-Governor.

To this Hall replied that Munson did not dare take such a step, that the delegates had been elected, and he had promised to accept if nominated, and that he could not get out of the race on the pretext that he would not run if Berry was not on the ticket with him as the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor.

Munson Threatens

Mr. Munson was much wrought up over the situation. The weather was hot, and shortly after the interview with Senator Hall and while on his way to a train he was attacked by vertigo, and became so dizzy that he had to be helped to his seat in a parlor car. His illness continued and did not respond rapidly to the treatment of a Williamsport physician. He left Philadelphia after this conference with Senator Hall on the Thursday previous to the Allentown Convention.

On the following Sunday he again met Senator Hall by appointment at Atlantic City and informed him that the condition of his health worried him; that in addition some private affairs had taken a turn that made it inadvisable for him to continue in politics, and he wished to be relieved of his promise to accept the Democratic nomination for Governor. He asked Hall to acquiesce in this decision and look elsewhere for a candidate for Governor.

Senator Hall positively declined to be a party to any such arrangement, and urged Mr. Munson to hold fast to his original position—that if nominated he would accept the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson persisted and Senator Hall insisted that it was unfair to the Democrats of the State that Mr. Munson should think of declining at that late date. He told him he was unnecessarily alarmed about his health and that he would be all right after a few weeks' rest.

At this point in the interview a close relative of Mr. Munson's who had been present during the interview appealed to Senator Hall to accept the declaration of Mr. Munson, urging that to force him to make the campaign for Governor was driving him to the grave, the claim being made by this person, who was in a position to know, that it was a fact that Mr. Munson's physical condition was such that any undue excitement was likely to result fatally.

Senator Hall finally agreed that if this was true it was a valid excuse for the position Mr. Munson sought to assume, but stated that it was his judgment that Mr. Munson could not afford to take it without consulting one of the best-known physicians in the country and having him certify after an examination that it would jeopardize his life to make the campaign for the Governorship.

Mr. Munson agreed to this, and Senator Hall parted with him with the understanding that he was to go to Allentown on Monday while Munson was to visit Dr. Musser in Philadelphia, and communicate the result of the medical examination to Hall at Allentown on Tuesday morning, and that failing to secure the physician's certificate justifying his position he would accept the nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson visited Dr. Musser on Monday afternoon of convention week, with the result already known that he advised him that his condition was such that it would be dangerous for him to engage in any work involving great effort or excitement.

Munson Gets Out.

Mr. Munson reached Williamsport on Monday evening. He immediately wrote and mailed to N. M. Edwards, who was in Allentown, the letter declining the nomination as well as a brief note to Senator Hall telling him to see Mr. Edwards who would show him the letter fully explaining his position.

Senator Hall received his short note from Munson early Tuesday morning. He immediately sought Edwards, who declared he had received no letter. Repeatedly during the day Hall sought Edwards, and as repeatedly Edwards visited the hotel desk and the post office inquiring for the expected letter. Edwards was in thorough ignorance of the contents of the letter, and although he was supposed to be Munson's closest political friend, had received no information of the attitude assumed by Munson.

Late on Tuesday evening a clerk in the Allentown hotel at which Edwards was stopping discovered that there was a letter for Edwards, that the letter had been there all day, but that another clerk had misplaced it in the letter case, which accounted for the fact that it was not delivered earlier.

The rest is history. Panic followed in the ranks of the leaders and their friends. Futile efforts, which consumed several hours, were made through the telephone to induce Munson to recall his letter of declination. It was midnight of the day before the convention when this effort was abandoned because Munson persisted in his refusal to run, and the hasty decision of the Democrats who favored Munson to turn to Grim and nominate him was made.

As stated it was close to midnight on the day before the Allentown convention when the final word was received from Munson that he would not accept the nomination. His letter to N. M. Edwards had been presented to the party leaders shortly after six o'clock, the intervening time until close to midnight being consumed in personal appeals over the telephone to Munson, to withdraw his letter, Colonel Guffey, Senator Dewalt, Chas. P. Donnelly and all of the other leaders on the ground participating in this fruitless effort.

Guffey Favored Berry.

Shortly before midnight there was a conference in Colonel Guffey's room. It was participated in not only by the close friends of Colonel Guffey, who had long been identified with his control of the Democratic organization, but by a number of others. Chas. P. Donnelly, of Philadelphia, suggested Congressman Palmer, of Stroudsburg, as the candidate for Governor and practically every man present agreed that he should be urged to take the place. Mr. Palmer, however, when urged, pointed to the fact that he was already a candidate for re-election to Congress and would not consent to run for Governor. Other names were canvassed, including those of both Berry and Grim. Of all the others considered none was at or near Allentown and it being doubtful that any of them would accept and the convention being only a few hours off the choice finally narrowed down to Berry and Grim, both of whom were candidates and both being in Allentown. Several present who had been opposed to the nomination of Berry suggested taking him, urging that this plan would remove the natural suspicion so apparent under all of the circumstances, that the name of Munson had only been used to trick the voters and that his nomination was never seriously considered by Colonel Guffey and his friends.

Colonel Guffey was inclined to agree to this and said he would if the others took the same view. They did not. Discussion followed of the original objection to Berry on account of the stories of his financial transactions with Colonel Guffey and the Harrisburg Trust Company while filling the office of State Treasurer, and it was finally decided to urge the nomination of Senator Grim, who was not present during any part of the discussion and who did not know of the decision reached until after it had been made.

WHY MUNSON LAID DOWN

FACTS DEMOCRATS SHOULD BE FULLY ACQUAINTED WITH.

And Then Determine to See to it

That Girm Gets the Full Democratic Vote.

Pennsylvania is within less than three months of the election the result of which will determine much of great importance to her people. A Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of Internal Affairs, all of the members of the lower branch of the Legislature and half of the members of the Senate, as well as all of the State's representatives in Congress are to be selected. The members of the Legislature elected will choose a United States Senator to share with Senator Penrose Pennsylvania's representation in that important body.

We are on the eve of a campaign which gives promise of being one of unusual interest, with three or more sets of candidates for all of the offices to be filled. The importance of the contest is not underestimated by thoughtful and serious-minded men who appreciate the obligations of citizenship, and it is safe to assume that there is more real interest being manifested by this class of men than ever before.

The situation has been complicated as a result of the circumstances attending the Democratic State Convention at Allentown a few weeks ago. The unlooked-for outcome of that gathering following the attitude assumed by C. La Rue Munson on the eve of the convention and the circumstances attending his retirement when his nomination for Governor was assured and generally expected, created a sensation without a parallel in Pennsylvania politics. It was generally assumed and many circumstances pointed to the conclusion that the situation was produced by a deal involving Munson and other Democrats and the managers of the Pennsylvania Republican Machine. This continues to be the belief of many honest men, who are convinced not only that Senator Grim, the gubernatorial nominee of the Democratic party, owes his place to such a deal, but that he had knowledge of how it was engineered and was a party to it.

The purpose of this article is to offer all of the obtainable evidence bearing upon the matter to the people of Pennsylvania, that they may better judge from a recital of such facts as are in the possession of the writer, whether or not these facts outweigh the circumstantial evidence upon which earlier conclusions were reached and decision made to oppose at the polls the nominees of the Allentown Convention.

A Harmony Deal.

Following the election of last year, when the splendid result of the personal organization of a few Williamsport Democrats illustrated what had so frequently been demonstrated in previous campaigns—the lack of an efficient Democratic organization in Pennsylvania—a movement was inaugurated to rehabilitate the Democratic party in this State. It was started by a Philadelphian not actively interested in politics and free from political ambition. The first conference looking to the desired end was held in Philadelphia, and participated in by C. La Rue Munson, of Williamsport; Vance McCormick, of Harrisburg; Jere Black of York and one other. Following this conference letters were written to a number of earnest Democrats seeking their views as to the best methods of rehabilitating the Pennsylvania Democracy.

Widespread interest was taken in the suggestion. Responses were received from every section of the State, and Democrats who had not for years taken any interest in the party organization expressed a willingness to cooperate in any movement calculated to rehabilitate the party and place it in a position to command general confidence.

The original idea was that an effort should be made to enlist the co-operation of a number of earnest men in different parts of Pennsylvania with a view to inaugurating a contest for the purpose of capturing the machinery of the Democratic organization in the hands of Colonel Guffey and his friends. After much thought on the subject, however, it was deemed best to make an effort to bring about the desired result through harmonious relations with Colonel Guffey and his friends if it were found that they were in a receptive mood.

With this end in view a conference was had with Colonel Guffey in New York during the latter part of 1909. The thought in mind was frankly stated to the Colonel, and he being convinced that the men back of the movement were not seeking personal advantage or political preferment, agreed to join with some of those who had previously been regarded as his political opponents, in the proposed movement to rehabilitate the Democratic party in Pennsylvania. It was then agreed that Colonel Guffey should discuss the matter with some of his close personal and political friends, and that he would arrange to meet some one representing Messrs. Munson, McCormick, Black and other anti-Guffeyites early in 1910 and consider the matter further. Pursuant to this agreement C. La Rue Munson was designated as the man to represent the several Democrats who had been regarded as the opponents of the Guffey organization.

A WAR TIME HORSE THIEF

IN SOLDIERS UNIFORM CAUGHT BY AN ADAMS COUNTY CITIZEN

Interesting Story of the Times, Theft and Capture of a Gang of Desperadoes.

There were many alarms during the Civil War throughout the border land which would be vividly remembered if they stood alone, but have faded before the great conflict of 1863. The word "The Rebels are Coming" was enough to produce one of the alarms and among the last to take place was more than a year after the battle.

General McCausland on July 30th burned Chambersburg and the news of the raid and burning quickly spread to Adams county and aroused this community. The fact is, various marauding parties of Confederates came into the county at the time, one reaching a point at Willow Grove, two miles west of Cashtown and secured about sixty horses in that neighborhood. Both the stores at Cashtown, the one owned by the late Wm. Ruff and the other by A. Scott, were despoiled of goods to the value of about $200 each.

At Gettysburg the citizens learned the day before to their sorrow what to expect if the report of a raid was well founded. Within a very few minutes after the news reached Gettysburg the town was in commotion. Horses were quickly saddled, bridled, mounted and hurried off to fancied places of safety. Carriages and wagons of all descriptions were quickly loaded with valuable documents from the post-office and from the different Court House offices, banks and stores and sent eastward. The Baltimore pike, the York pike, as also the Bonneauville road were soon crowded with fugitives hurrying off with valuables. Such was the state of affairs three miles out the Baltimore pike in the White Run settlement.

In the midst of the excitement word came to me from the late Michael Fisel, whose eldest son was in my employ for that year, for us to hurry the horses to the White Church, the rendezvous, together with a supply of feed for the occasion. This was done in great haste and not a little confusion.

Then it was that the first real trouble came. The horses, most of them, had just come from the fields hungry and thirsty after their day's work, and manifested a decidedly rebellious spirit. In other words they were inclined to resent the unexpected burden placed upon them to go supperless on an indefinite journey embracing probably the whole night.

To help get the unwilling brutes fairly started Mr. Fisel suggested that I join the mournful procession. To this proposition I readily agreed. Taking the seat beside Mr. Fisel we fell in with the long line of fugitive moving sorrowfully eastward, my hired man riding one of my horses and leading two others of mine on his right.

We had not proceeded over a hundred and fifty yards from the church when lo! and behold! not over a hundred paces ahead of us, on the pike opposite the residence of ex-Sheriff Lightner, who then occupied the place, we were amazed to see young Mr. Fisel held up by three desperadoes, two of them wearing the Federal cavalry uniform, while the third seemed to be in civilian costume. Taking in the situation at once as a desperate one, I lost no time in jumping off the two-horse wagon loaded with feed for the horses on their supposed long and wearisome journey. I rushed up to the desperate group and demanded to know what it all meant. At first there was no response, but after repeated demands for an explanation the leader of the gang, a red-headed, sandy-bearded man of medium height, snarled up in an angry tone "Our horses are played out—we must have fresh ones. This one seems to suit us and we are going to take her." (a fine mare some six or seven years old.)

"That is my beast, I cannot spare her. I lost two valuable horses last year by reason of the Gettysburg battle and I cannot let you have her."

"There is no use talking; we are going to have the beast and you may go to h—."

I had learned during the Gettysburg campaign of the year before that the General government pays no claims except on vouchers properly authenticated.

Again appealing to them to spare my mare, I said:

"Well, gentlemen, if you are determined to impress my mare which, at this time I can ill afford to spare, be good enough to give me something in the way of a voucher or receipt, so that I can make claim upon the government for reimbursement." All the while the three desperadoes were busy removing the farm bridle and replacing it with a bridle and saddle they had with them. At this juncture a man in civilian clothes appeared, who mounted my mare and the three disappeared quickly in the vast throng moving down the pike.

Dazed as I was for a moment, I soon determined to make at least some effort to obtain satisfaction. After considerable difficulty, I learned that the mounted troops then moving down the pike in the direction of Littlestown was a detachment of Cole's Federal Cavalry in command of Captain Winchester. This official was finally pointed out to me by one of his men who seemed to have a little of the milk of human kindness in his composition. This Capt. W. was a gentleman though somewhat dignified and distant. Timidly addressing myself to the Captain and stating my case, the answer came: "We are not needing horses and are not taking any; if you had a horse taken he was probably stolen."

"But, Captain, the men who took my beast wore the uniform of your command, and represented themselves as authorized to impress horses. Can you not aid me in this matter?"

"All I can say is that we will soon go into camp for the night. After we have gone into camp you can go where you please in search of your mare. If you find your property I will give you permission to take her."

For this I thanked him sincerely, notwithstanding his supercilious and lofty manner. It was then half an hour after sunset and the head of the column was still a mile west of Two Taverns. Wearily I trudged along by the side of the old pike, then much worn and neglected, all the while keeping a lookout for my cherished and faithful mare which a year before was the means of saving my life and that of Adjutant Franklin Glenroy of the 68th Penna. volunteers at the confluence of Rock Creek and White Run while trying to ford the latter stream with a load of needed supplies for the wounded at the 3rd corps hospital a few days after the battle.

But not once did I get sight of my coveted Fannie.

Fortunately just as the shades of night were falling fast over the Two Taverns landscape Captain Winchester's contingent filed to the right into a field at the intersection of the Taneytown road with the Baltimore pike and soon had their camp established.

Without the least molestation I was permitted to wander through every portion of the camp in quest of my property. It was nightfall before I left the camp a deeply sorry and disappointed man. It is possible that this feeling of sorrow and disappointment was intensified by the fact that, about a year and a half before I had bought the mare on credit at a high price, giving my note in payment, which obligation had not been satisfied.

Be that as it may there was but one thing left for me to do under the circumstances, and that was to drag myself home more dead than alive over the intervening two miles and a half to my lonely home to break the unwelcome intelligence to my distracted wife and first-born, the latter of whom could, with help, ride the gentle mare and who was wont to lisp her sweet name.

It was just as I feared. Scarce had I stepped over the threshold on my return to the isolated home which I was then glad to own, and where I had spent the happiest years of my life, when the query came from the innocent prattling boy.

"Where Fanny? Where Fanny?"

"Ah, my child, Fanny gone! Fanny gone! You will never see poor Fanny any more."

No supper for the weary home-comer that night, and, alas! none for the poor, distracted wife and mother who in her lonely home that dreary night waited long for the familiar footfall so long delayed. The suspense and agony were all the greater because of the cruel dread of another invasion by Lee's army so loudly proclaimed by men who should have been made of sterner stuff.

By this no criticism is intended. From a military view-point it may have been entirely right and proper for the large and well equipped body of cavalry to beat a hasty retreat from the scene of trouble in Franklin county on the fateful 30th of July, 1864, for the reason that the enemy in and around Chambersburg probably outnumbered the Union forces four to one, but we submit that it was in bad part for them to skedaddle as they did across the South Mountain into Adams county creating intense excitement and alarm throughout the entire southern belt of Adams county.

There are people yet living in Gettysburg who recall that awful day—that day of alarm, suspense and agony. The declaration was made that Chambersburg was burned by order of Gen. Lee, that his army was advancing in great force in the direction of Gettysburg, that all farmers who desired to save their farm stock and other movable property, should lose no time in doing it, and that the citizens of Gettysburg and other towns throughout the county should take steps at once to get everything of value that was capable of removal to places of safety.

In Gettysburg the excitement quickly rose to fever heat. The chief of the county officials, the bank officials, the merchants, the postmaster, as also a number of persons who had become prominent in various lines deemed it prudent to make themselves scarce—all made haste to find safety in flight.

After I reached home on that eventful Saturday night, I sought succor of trouble in sleep, but sleep came not at my bidding. About two o'clock in the morning I decided to make another effort to find my mare. Accordingly I got up about 2 o'clock in the morning, went to my desk, took out a 5 inch sure shooter Allen & Wheelock, carrying a 32 caliber No. 2 ball, put in the barrel six fresh short No. 2 cartridges, with reliable swaged bullets, made expressly for target and gallery shooting. This pistol I bought the year before from a soldier.

My wife expostulated with me and tried to dissuade me from taking the desperate chances. In this she failed. With my shooting iron and a stout club I left for the pike.

Not much in the way of clues was found until the toll-gate was reached. "Yes," said the toll collector, "from your description of the parties they passed through, but refused to pay toll." At Littlestown some additional information was obtained. The gatekeeper on the pike a mile beyond town felt sure they did not pass through his gate. A quick return to Littlestown, where the trail was recovered in the eastern outskirts of the village, for that is all it was then.

A pretty lively gallop down the mud road leading to Hanover. That was Sunday, July 31st, and a delightful day it was.

About a mile below town was the residence of Mr. Amos Lefevre, a lineal descendant of the few French Huguenots who early came to what is now Adams county to escape religious persecution. It was a bright, pleasant Sunday morning, and all nature seemed at her best—an ideal morning.

Mr. Lefevre was a close friend of mine, as indeed he was of everybody. He was a typical gentleman—one of nature's true noblemen. Mr. L. was standing at the gate of his lawn as I drew up. A cordial greeting, and a few hurried, earnest words concerning the situation of affairs just then.

"Yes," said Mr. Lefevre, "from your description of the men, I am sure you are on their trail. Late last night," said he, "a gang of desperate characters, six or eight in number, came to my house, waked us from sleep, ordered the family to prepare supper for them, ordered their horses fed, a dozen or more in number, and slept in the barn. This morning," he continued, "when we went to the barn, the desperadoes were gone and with them had disappeared several valuable saddles and bridles."

Afraid of Ghosts

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine of known composition and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

His Land or His Lass

By Martha McCulloch-Williams

(Copyright, 1908 by Associated Literary Press.)

"I do wonder," Mrs. Page began plaintively.

Her sister, Sue Andrew, interrupted snappishly: "What? You wonder so much, I'd wonder if you didn't for a whole hour."

"Well! I can't help thinking about Sonny. You don't understand, Susan—you never had a boy, nor minded what you had on. But I'm afraid college is going to go mighty hard with him. Boys that have to wear homemade shirts and earn their own spending money it seems to me had better keep at home."

"Shut up, Agnes! You make me sick!" Sue said, stamping her foot. "It is just your way—you'll be writing the boy word to quit. Patience knows, he's got load enough without that. Every Page from great-grandfathers down has been through college. Do you reckon he's the very last of 'em, wants to grow up and loaf—and stay poor forever?"

"He always loved the land so—dumb creatures and sheep were a heap more to him than books," Mrs. Page protested. "At least, until he fell in with Molly Glen, and you put at him to turn lawyer and marry into her father's firm. As if she'd wait all that long time! Why, she's got beaux by dozens."

"She'll wait—never you fear," Miss Sue said confidently. "Can you keep a secret? Well! she herself told me to tell Billy she would. Her pap ain't in a hurry to part with her—besides, he thinks the world and all of Son-of-William, I mean. We've got to get out of using that baby name. Molly said he did—said daddy would lend William all the money he needed. I tell you she took my breath away, speaking out so. But we couldn't have that, you know—Son—William, must get his education without being beholden except to his own. We can mortgage the place if the pinch comes too hard—but it won't be for Glen money."

"I—I Hope You Don't Mind—Much."

"I'd—I'd—rather sell it," Mrs. Page half whispered. "I will—if Sonny can't get through without. But Jeemes, my husband, charged me, last thing of all, never to make no mortgage to nobody—and I'll mind him."

"I hope there'll be no need—the crop's looking fine," Miss Sue said comfortingly. "Don't you worry, Agnes. You'll live to ride in your carriage yet—once William gets a start. I know his way—he won't stop short of the top."

The crop fulfilled its promise—and rather more. It brought a fine price, likewise, and Sonny, away at college, was let know he might, if he chose, come home at Christmas. But he resisted the temptation. "I'll wait for Easter recess," he wrote. "I want to see the woods in bloom, and smell the plowing."

He did come at Easter, high-hearted, full of joy and hope. In a day he was far otherwise. Things were going ill on the place. His aunt and his mother did their very best, but they had to depend on hired men or croppers to keep up the fences, to plow, and sow, and plant. The stock looked unthrifty—all but the fowls and the milk cows—to them Miss Sue herself gave care.

Billy gave over all holiday plans and set himself sedulously to work. He had ten days free and in course of them he went just once to see Molly. She was as charming as ever and reproached him sweetly for not coming earlier, and especially for slighting her Easter picnic and her party later.

Judge Glen was more than cordial—mightily interested in William's plans and progress.

"Remember, we, all the country indeed, expect you to live up to the name," he said. "Your grandfather was in the senate—I hope to see you headed for it, at least, before I quit seeing anything."

Sonny went home, his head whirling. He knew he stood in sight of the parting of the ways. He could keep on at college; he could even hope to make a record there. He had a good clear brain, and a strong clean body to back it. Further, he had the grit to constrain his inclination.

Land-love, land-hunger, was in his blood, but he could also find interest in the law. He would never love it as he loved the world outdoors, but it was not alien nor repellent to him. Moreover, it led to Molly. He could not doubt that—she had as good as told him so. She would never be allowed to marry William Page, farmer, but William Page, her father's junior partner, would be a match quite acceptable to the paternal mind.

Over against all that there was his mother, a figure of pathos, of plety and resignation. She would turn herself out of house and home for Sonny's advantage, and do it not merely in meek uncomplaining, but with a sort of painful joy. Aunt Susan, likewise, although she was of tougher fiber, and more filled with ambition, yet the home's passing would hit her hard.

How would they manage through the long years before he got on in his profession? If, lacking him, the place was already falling away from itself. Its income would have dwindled to the vanishing point by the time he was ready to earn a living. That meant it would have to be sold outright by the time he was half way through. He wanted to be a great man with part of himself, but there was another, a stronger part, that pleaded for the home and those it sheltered.

He could only listen faintly then. He was going back on the morrow. But it was not so long to term end. Afterward? He thought no further. Instead, very sensibly, he went to sleep. And when the charm of college life had again laid hold on him he somehow shunted the conflict to the very back of his mind.

He got through commencement with such mild honors as are possible to freshmen. Molly was there to see him, but he did not dance with her. In spite of Aunt Sue's pleadings, he had no festal garments. So the dances knew him not.

Indeed, it was the things he felt in honor bound to forego that brought to life again the Easter struggle. It was lively even before he reached home and found again the lack of the master's hand and eye. He flung himself ardently into righting things—so ardently that Miss Sue shook her head. Molly also complained—William never had time for her. William—even his mother no longer called him Sonny—guessed a little as he listened, but said nothing.

He was still fighting his battle—a hard one for a lad of twenty. All summer it raged within him, now one force, now the other, getting the best of it.

College would have won if he had not loved Molly so well. In the light of that love he knew some part of what he meant to his mother. He would not leave her to loneliness, to poverty, at last to homelessness. She might not live to see him retrieve everything.

So one still, starlit August night he said to Molly, very low, the words like sobs almost:

"I'm not going back; it would be wrong because of mother." Then, more quickly, but very, very humbly: "I—I hope you don't mind—much. I know you never—could—marry a—a farmer."

"I believe I might—if only he would ask me," Molly said, reaching out her hand. "Billy, you're a goose, a big goose," she said. "But we mean to save you—Aunt Sue and I. You shan't have to give up either your land or your lass."

POWER IN FALLS OF NIAGARA

Only About 5.5 Per Cent. Being Utilized—Many Industries Attracted by Electrical Conditions.

A recent article in the Electrical World contains the following data relative to the utilization of the energy from Niagara Falls. Of the 5,000,000 horse-power represented by Niagara Falls, only about 5.5 per cent. is being utilized. Of this, 126,800 horse-power is employed in electro-chemical processes, 56,200 horse-power for railway service, 36,400 horse-power for lighting, 45,540 horse-power for various industrial services, 12,300 horse-power is transmitted over more than one hundred miles, 33,500 horse-power between 75 miles and 100 miles, 3,100 horse-power 50 miles, 79,640 horse-power between 10 and 30 miles, while 145,400 horse-power is used locally, showing that many industries have been attracted to Niagara Falls because of the favorable electric power conditions to be found there.

Kites Old and New.

Down the street the boys are flying kites. They are generally store kites, made up of bird-like forms and vivid colors. This is not the kite of the boyhood of other days, when the boys had unlimited fun. They made their own kites. There was no touch of commercialism in the sport of those days. The boy's genius was the imperial circumstance. The kites in those fair Hellenic days were six cornered affairs, made of three sticks, some string and a newspaper. The paste used in sticking the paper to the string, connecting the ends of the sticks, was made of flour and cold water. In these degenerate days such paste would not stick at all, but then it did. And the tail of that kite—what a glory!—a long string with bits of paper tied on at six-inch intervals, making it look like the spine of a great snake. How proud it seemed undulating up there in the blue! Then kite flying was closely interwoven with the genius of the boy. He had to depend upon himself. But it was a loving task from the whittling of the slim sticks to the tying on of the tail. But the great joy at last was to use his creation, floating up in the azure, as if it was a part of the glory of the world.—Ohio State Journal.

The busier a man is, the better able is he to throw his energy into other work.

"You are just the man I am looking for," said I in a few short words.

"Come get on one of your fine horses and go with me in search of our property." This proposition he at first declined, but a few minutes later accepted. In a trice, as I recall it now, he mounted a horse and away we sped. The trip from Mr. L.'s place to Hanover was without special incident.

Arriving at Hanover on that glorious Sabbath summer morning a most remarkable situation presented itself. As we approached the central portion of the town it seemed as though the entire population was in evidence on the streets. All looking westward whence the star of empire takes its way. Not only were the natives out in force on that occasion, but mingling with them were hundreds of strangers sojourning temporarily in Hanover while on their way to fancied places of security farther eastward, all apparently intent upon one object—the salvation of valuable property.

It soon became apparent why all eyes were bent westward on that occasion, and that was to behold the advent of Lee and his myrmidons, as they saw them a year ago.

As Mr. Lefevre and myself entered the town all eyes seemed fixed upon us. What their thoughts were concerning us we could not divine, but they seemed to be suspicious of us. Having heard the report that Chambersburg was in ashes, and that Lee was again intent upon another invasion of the north. Be that as it may they were suspicious.

Hanover then had a very important official known as provost-marshal, whose duty it was among other things to look after the military affairs of his bailiwick, apprehend deserters from Federal army, and so forth.

Hanover's provost at that time was a German by the name of Henry Hensron. Possibly it was also a part of his duty to look after people in civil life away from home and unable or unwilling to give a satisfactory account of themselves. At all events so it seemed on this occasion. He bluntly demanded to know our business in Hanover at that time of momentous events. The information vouchsafed seemed to satisfy his majesty, for he remarked that the party we were looking for passed through Hanover an hour or so before, defying his authority as a government official. In other words he stated that from all accounts the party we were looking for were desperate looking fellows, heavily armed, were mounted on good horses, and in his opinion were dangerous characters.

"My advice to you," he said, "is to let 'em alone and go home. If I failed to take 'em with the help of my guard much less can you." My friend from Union township wilted at the strong language of the marshal.

Sitting on his improvised sorrel in Center Square and somewhat impatient of the Provost's indifference to afford aid, the writer hereof asked:

"Is there not one man in this crowd willing to go with me on a hunt for the desperadoes?"

Three men promptly expressed their willingness to go. They were Simon Haner, John Epley and George Plank all residents of Franklin township, Adams county. All were good men and brave to a fault, but none exhibited any show of bravado. Two of the number, as was learned subsequently, were at the time connected with the government secret service, receiving compensation for the apprehension of soldiers absent from their commands without proper authority.

Whatever the motive, those three men of courage lost no time getting their horses saddled and bridled, and reported themselves ready for the expedition. Without loss of time the redoubtable quartette sallied forth for the foray, taking the main road leading from Hanover to York.

About a mile east of Hanover, on this main thoroughfare, was a fine plantation, then owned and occupied by a farmer, Henry Bowman. The farm was in a high state of cultivation. The house, a medium-size brick, stood a little back from the public road; the barn, one of those immense structures for which York, Adams, Lancaster and other Pennsylvania counties in the German belt are famous, stood at a safe distance farther south; the big wagon shed, with its complement of corn cribs, carriage house, hog pen and poultry house stood a few rods to the west. Surrounding all these was a substantial post and rail fence some five or six feet in height. It is necessary to be thus particular in order to understand what follows.

Arriving at the Bowman farm-house a hasty inquiry developed the fact that a considerable number of farmers from Adams county had taken refuge at the place temporarily, among them being the late George Stover and his brother David, as also Mr. G. W. Irvine, of Highland township.

The desperadoes had also come to the Bowman farm and they were behaving in an insolent and offensive manner, they had ordered the ladies of the house to prepare them a good breakfast, that they should be quick about it, and that they were then regaling themselves at the farmer's well-supplied table.

Satisfied that an investigation was desirable our party dismounted, tied our horses to the road-side fence, and fled into the farmer's near yard, aiming for an open space between the big barn and the wagon shed already referred to. Tied to the fence at safe intervals were some 15 or 20 horses, some of them feeding.

Just as our band reached a point opposite the rear entrance to the farmhouse, and just as the writer espied his mare helping herself to a meagre feed of hay, just at that moment the gang espied us and rushed to intercept us. The conflict was quick, sharp and decisive. The ringleader of the desperate gang, Richard Welsh, who was armed with a pair of Colt's Navy revolvers, besides an ugly knife in his belt, did his level best to draw a bead on the writer hereof, who had pinioned his antagonist in a sort of death grapple, took deadly aim at Mr. Haner and discharged one of his cartridges. The ball passed through the fleshy part of the thigh and buried itself in the calf of the right leg, inflicting a dangerous wound.

The moment Mr. Haner fell the ruffians threw up the sponge and asked for mercy, at the same time surrendering their arms. The flow of blood from Mr. H.'s wound was very profuse for a while but was finally stanchied and controlled. Unfortunately there was no wagon or carriage with easy springs available at the time, so it was decided to make the suffering patient as comfortable as possible in the Bowman homestead until a doctor could be brought from Hanover. What to do with the villain under the circumstances was also a question.

It was presently decided that one of the Adams county men, Mr. Plank, should assist the writer in getting the prisoners to a place of safety at Hanover, and then return with a suitable conveyance to convey the wounded man to town for surgical attention, which program was carried out.

But the villains, notwithstanding the fact that they had been disarmed, were inclined to be obstreperous, declaring they would rather die than submit to the humiliation of walking back to Hanover.

"Last evening, my larks. I was at your mercy; conditions are different now. This morning you will foot it back to Hanover or take the consequences. Take your choice gentlemen."

The suggestion had the desired effect. "Will you not be so kind as to let us ride our horses on the way back to Hanover?"

"Only on condition that you do so in a way to make the return trip in perfect safety so far as we are concerned."

The terms were quickly agreed to and the little procession started back under cover of their own shooting irons. The ride back to Hanover was made quickly, safely and without special incident, except that the culprits were sullen and morose.

Intelligence of the capture of the men preceded our arrival and the erstwhile timid official had regained his nerve.

"Dishmount," was the officers terse command to the crestfallen braves of that early Sabbath morning when they scornfully ignored the command of the local officer to give an account of themselves, as was his duty to demand.

A careful search of their clothing for concealed deadly weapons, their names, ages, residences, military affiliations as also their reasons for being absent from their commands.

This done they were hustled off to the local prison which was a veritable subterranean dungeon in Center Square under the local market house. Here they remained until the following day (Monday) when they were brought to Gettysburg and placed in the county prison, where they remained until the ensuing term of Court in August, 1894, at which time the grand jury promptly found true bills against both men for horse stealing. At the instance of the accused the case was continued. At the November term defendants were still unprepared for trial. Later, through their attorney, they asked to be released on personal bail. Application refused. A year or more later, as the writer thinks, the prisoners were released temporarily on a money recognizance of six hundred dollars each—$1200 in all, which sum was promptly furnished, the money being placed in charge of the County Commissioners, the same to be refunded in the event of their acquittal. It is hardly necessary to state that the men failed to appear for trial. Accordingly the recognizance was declared by the Court forfeited April 18, 1895.

The writer managed to obtain an allowance of $50 for use of the man, Simon Haner, out of the fund by way of reimbursement for surgical and medical services rendered by Dr. Eckert, of Hanover. The Court costs footed up $92.22. Balance of the forfeited recognizance was later applied to the establishment of a law library.

One fact of interest learned after the battle at Bowman's place and the hearing before the Provost Marshall at Hanover on Sunday was that the men claimed to be from West Virginia, the name of the older man being Richard Welsh and the younger David R. Linton, the latter being engaged to be married about that time. While in the Gettysburg jail the men sent for me on several occasions with a view to a settlement, offering me considerable sums of money as an inducement, all of which were spurned.

GOOD NEWS

Many Gettysburg Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby.

"Good news travels fast," and the thousands of bad back sufferers in Gettysburg are glad to learn that prompt relief is within their reach. Many a lame weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kid-ney Pills. Our citizens are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

Mrs. H. H. Ridinger, 25 Brecken-ridge St., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "I can endorse Doan's Kidney Pills just as highly to-day as I did two years ago when I publically told of their merits. A member of my family was afflicted with backache and at night often had to get up and sit in a chair. The kidneys were weak and there were severe pains throughout the body. Doan's Kidney Pills were fi-nally procured at the People's Drug Store and they brought relief from the first. As their use was continued, a great improvement was noticeable. I was led to try Doan's Kidney Pills by this person's experience and I am glad to say that I received relief from disagreeable symptoms of kidney trouble that had clung to me for some time. I cannot give Doan's Kidney Pills more praise than they deserve."

SUDDEN DEATH IN THE BUCHANAN VALLEY.

Death Comes Suddenly to Well Known Persons and With Halting Step to Others.

JOSEPHINE ELIZABETH COLE, youngest daughter of John F. and Jennie G. Cole, died on Thursday morning at 3.35 unexpectedly to all her friends. She had been slightly indisposed from Monday, but there was nothing perceptible to indicate danger of a fatal disease. She was up and walking about, and on Wednesday evening sat at the table and partook of a light supper, but grew worse as the night advanced and at four in the morning showed alarming symptoms of congestion of the lungs and only lived four hours and a half. The entire community was shocked as it was not known that she was ill. She was interred in St. Ignatius cemetery on Saturday at 3 p. m. The bearers were Blanche Irwin, Esther Dillon, Evelyn Hall and Bertha Hall. She is survived by her parents, John F. and Jennie G. Cole, three brothers, Raymond, Charles and Earl, and five sisters, Misses Genevieve, Evelyn, Ethel, Mary and Loretta Cole. She has but "Gone home by a shorter way." Gone to rejoice in her early found bliss. Gone from all of this world's trials and struggles, and suffering. God sparing the tender feet lest they be bruised, and torn by the brambles and thorns, that beset life's longer journey, to a home of bliss beyond. The Savior has led her through beautiful paths of light and love into her sure reward of eternal happiness in heaven. In robes emblematical of purity we robe her and placed garlands of nature's fairest flowers as decorations as a preparation for her last resting place and left in God's care.

Notice.

To my many friends, the Farmers of Adams County.

I desire to call your attention to fact that I am fully entitled to practice veterinary medicine under Act of 1909 and that the recent case against me ignored that act and proceeded against me for violating Acts of 1899, 1895 and 1905 regarding veterinary registration. The case having been dismissed it should be kept in mind that trouble was sought to be made me on a technicality, and not by reason of any want of skill in my profession or complaint among my patrons, for such has never been the case. It is up to you decide whether you will permit a technicality to take from me any of the fruits of a twenty seven years successful practice.

Sincerely yours
DR. E. D. HUDSON.

WHY MUNSON LAID DOWN

FACTS DEMOCRATS SHOULD BE FULLY ACQUAINTED WITH.

And Then Determine to See to it That Girm Gets the Full Democratic Vote.

Pennsylvania is within less than three months of the election the result of which will determine much of great importance to her people. A Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of Internal Affairs, all of the members of the lower branch of the Legislature and half of the members of the Senate, as well as all of the state's representatives in Congress are to be selected. The members of the Legislature elected will choose a United States Senator to share with Senator Penrose Pennsylvania's representation in that important body.

We are on the eve of a campaign which gives promise of being one of unusual interest, with three or more sets of candidates for all of the offices to be filled. The importance of the contest is not underestimated by thoughtful and serious-minded men who appreciate the obligations of citizenship, and it is safe to assume that there is more real interest being manifested by this class of men than ever before.

The situation has been complicated as a result of the circumstances attending the Democratic State Convention at Allentown a few weeks ago. The unlooked-for outcome of that gathering following the attitude assumed by C. LaRue Munson on the eve of the convention and the circumstances attending his retirement when his nomination for Governor was assured and generally expected, created a sensation without a parallel in Pennsylvania politics. It was generally assumed and many circumstances pointed to the conclusion that the situation was produced by a deal involving Munson and other Democrats and the managers of the Pennsylvania Republican Machine. This continues to be the belief of many honest men, who are convinced not only that Senator Grim, the gubernatorial nominee of the Democratic party, owes his place to such a deal, but that he had knowledge of how it was engineered and was a party to it.

The purpose of this article is to offer all of the obtainable evidence bearing upon the matter to the people of Pennsylvania, that they may better judge from a recital of such facts as are in the possession of the writer, whether or not these facts outweigh the circumstantial evidence upon which earlier conclusions were reached and decision made to oppose at the polls the nominees of the Allentown Convention.

A Harmony Deal.

Following the election of last year, when the splendid result of the personal organization of a few Williamsport Democrats illustrated what had so frequently been demonstrated in previous campaigns—the lack of an efficient Democratic organization in Pennsylvania—a movement was inaugurated to rehabilitate the Democratic party in this State. It was started by a Philadelphia not actively interested in politics and free from political ambition. The first conference looking to the desired end was held in Philadelphia, and participated in by C. La Rue Munson, of Williamsport; Vance McCormick, of Harrisburg; Jere Black of York and one other. Following this conference letters were written to a number of earnest Democrats seeking their views as to the best methods of rehabilitating the Pennsylvania Democracy.

Widespread interest was taken in the suggestion. Responses were received from every section of the State, and Democrats who had not for years taken any interest in the party organization expressed a willingness to co-operate in any movement calculated to rehabilitate the party and place it in a position to command general confidence.

The original idea was that an effort should be made to enlist the co-operation of a number of earnest men in different parts of Pennsylvania with a view to inaugurating a contest for the purpose of capturing the machinery of the Democratic organization in the hands of Colonel Guffey and his friends. After much thought on the subject, however, it was deemed best to make an effort to bring about the desired result through harmonious relations with Colonel Guffey and his friends if it were found that they were in a receptive mood.

With this end in view a conference was had with Colonel Guffey in New York during the latter part of 1909. The thought in mind was frankly stated to the Colonel, and he being convinced that the men back of the movement were not seeking personal advantage or political preferment, agreed to join with some of those who had previously been regarded as his political opponents, in the proposed movement to rehabilitate the Democratic party in Pennsylvania. It was then agreed that Colonel Guffey should discuss the matter with some of his close personal and political friends, and that he would arrange to meet some one representing Messrs. Munson, McCormick, Black and other anti-Guffeyites early in 1910 and consider the matter further. Pursuant to this agreement C. La Rue Munson was designated as the man to represent the several Democrats who had been regarded as the opponents of the Guffey organization.

arranged for a conference, which was composed of equal numbers of the close associates of Colonel Guffey and those who had been known as his opponents in recent contests within the party. This conference was held in New York. It was agreed that the Democracy of Pennsylvania could not hope to succeed in the approaching campaign unless factional differences were obliterated and a more effective and harmonious organization perfected. The need for this was apparent to everyone and the only debatable question was that of finding a favorable plan of harmonizing. After much discussion it was finally decided that the best way to bring about the desired result was to have Chairman Dewalt, of the Democratic State Committee, call a meeting of that body at Harrisburg, inviting thereto not only all of the members of the committee, but all of the Democratic County Chairmen, as well as a number of other leading Democrats from different sections of the State. It was then agreed, also, that, at the proposed meeting of the Democratic organization and leaders of Democratic thought at Harrisburg, provision should be made for the appointment of a new committee, whose members should be authorized to enlist the co-operation of all Democrats of Pennsylvania in securing a more effective organization; and, in order that the movement might be general and remove all suspicion of the thought that it was intended; to promote the leadership of any particular individual or faction, it was agreed that this committee should be empowered to solicit contributions to be used in strengthening the organization, and that not more than one hundred dollars should be accepted from any one person to go into the proposed fund.

Because of the fact that much of the factional disturbance among the Pennsylvania Democrats was due to conditions in Philadelphia no one from Philadelphia was present at this New York conference. The participants were Democrats outside of Philadelphia. Subsequently Charles P. Donnelly, of Philadelphia, was told of the meetings that had been held and of the arrangements that had been made to bury past differences within the ranks of the Democracy of Pennsylvania, to reunite the warring interests and re-establish the party by perfecting the organization and strengthening its facilities for fighting the common enemy. Mr. Donnelly, representing the Philadelphia Democracy, approved the plan and agreed to co-operate with Colonel Guffey and his friends and those who had previously been known as his opponents, in bringing about the desired result.

Plan Carried Out

The plan was carried out to the letter. Chairman Dewalt issued the call of the meeting at Harrisburg and it was largely attended. The resolution was presented and adopted appointing a finance committee, headed by Vance McCormick, of Harrisburg, to plan the reorganization campaign and collect the funds—not in excess of one hundred dollars from any one individual—necessary to carry on the work.

Nothing had been said up to this present time by any one interested in the movement on the subject of candidates for the offices to be filled in Pennsylvania this year. Following the Harrisburg meeting, however, there was considerable discussion regarding the most available candidate for Governor. Ex-State Treasurer Berry was already in the field as an active aspirant for the Democratic nomination. Among the friends of Colonel Guffey he was not popular, and this was equally true among many of the earnest Democrats of the State who could not be regarded as followers of Colonel Guffey. The initial reason for the opposition to the Guffey following to Berry for Governor was the attitude of Berry toward the Guffey organization in its opposition to the nomination of Bryan for President in 1908. Many of those who were not followers of the Guffey organization had knowledge of the financial transactions between Colonel Guffey and Mr. Berry during the time the latter was State Treasurer of Pennsylvania as well as of the relations of Mr. Berry while Treasurer to the Harrisburg Trust Company and they felt that if for no other reason, the stories of these deals if made public would discredit the candidacy of Mr. Berry among many people and put the Democratic party on the defensive in the approaching campaign. This latter fact was explained to Mr. Berry as a reason for opposition to him by many Democrats, but he said that he could explain the transactions to the satisfaction of his critics and that they in no way reflected upon his conduct while State Treasurer.

There was a general desire to unite upon some man as a candidate for Governor who could not be regarded as a factionalist. During the previous campaign, as will be remembered, C. LaRue Munson had been the candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court. He had never been active in politics and was not associated with any faction of the party. During the campaign he made a vigorous canvass of the State, visiting every county and making many friends, with the result that when the vote was counted it was discovered that he had carried the State outside of Philadelphia. This result prompted the suggestion from many quarters that he was the most available candidate for Governor and he was urged from all sides to consent to the use of his name for that purpose.

The Sighting of Munson.

As stated, Mr. Munson had not been an active figure in politics. He had never been identified with the so-called Guffey organization; and it was well known that he had become convinced during the campaign of the previous year that this organization, in many of the counties of the State, was worse than useless. Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall, and several of the most important members of the so-called Guffey organization were at first not inclined to favor the candidacy of Munson, but, after a great deal of discussion, and finding that there was a strong feeling among the Democrats of all factions throughout the State in favor of the nomination of Munson, they came to the conclusion that he was the most available candidate, and announced their willingness to support him.

They were influenced to this conclusion largely by the demands from many Democratic county leaders and prospective candidates for the Legislature who urged as a reason for their preference for Munson the fact that he had, as a candidate for the Supreme Court Judgeship, carried their counties, that he had made many personal friends during his canvass and that as a candidate for Governor his leadership would inspire many independent voters anxious to defeat the Penrose machine. This argument, coming from all quarters of the State, finally won Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall and the other chief backers of the Democratic organization, who had, at the beginning, thought of Senator Dewalt, of Lehigh, or Senator Grim of Bucks, for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Mr. Munson, at the beginning of the effort to name him for Governor, did not enthrust. The hard work of the previous campaign, together with the results obtained, had disheartened him, and he did not much feel like again becoming a candidate for office and expending more of his time and means in that direction. He finally agreed, however—and so stated publicly—that he would not become an active candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, but that if a majority of the delegates to the Democratic Convention favored his nomination he would accept. Privately Mr. Munson let it be understood that his desires did not run in the direction of the Governorship. He said that his ambition was to become a Judge and frankly stated to those in his confidence that he had already sought, through friends, the aid of Senator Penrose to secure a Federal Judgeship should it be found possible to induce the President to name a Democrat from Pennsylvania.

When this became known, which was when Mr. Munson was first urged to consent to the acceptance of the nomination for Governor and after the leaders had agreed to favor him, it was agreed that should a Judgeship come Munson's way in advance of the Democratic primaries he could honorably accept it, but that once the primaries were held and the delegates to the Democratic State Convention elected with the understanding that Munson would accept their votes, he could not in honor accept a Federal Judgeship should one be offered him.

A Discordant Note.

At the meeting of the Democratic State Committee called to launch the harmony program there was but one discordant note. That was produced by the friends of ex-State Treasurer Berry, who presented a resolution making it possible for candidates for delegates to the Democratic State Convention to state their preference for Governor, afford Democrats an opportunity to instruct the delegates and binding the delegates so instructed to vote as ordered by their constituents.

This resolution had no sooner been introduced than it met with opposition, but the harmonizing influence of the occasion prevailed, the opposition was withdrawn and the resolution was adopted.

This made it possible for any Democrat seeking a nomination to set up candidates for delegates at the primaries duly labeled with the name of their preference for Governor. It was a fair proposition and calculated to insure a square deal. Following the meeting only two active aspirants for the Democratic nomination for Governor entered the race. They were ex-State Treasurer Berry and Senator Grim. It was made known, however, and clearly understood that C. LaRue Munson would accept the nomination if it were tendered him. When the primaries were held the delegates set up by Mr. Berry were elected in a number of counties, but failed of election in most cases where uninstructed delegates favorable to Munson were in the field, Senator Grim secured as many if not more delegates than Berry but it is safe to say that on the eve of the Allentown Convention more than 200 of the 300 delegates to that gathering expected to vote for Munson on the following day.

The sensational announcement of the declination of Munson to permit the use of his name shortly before midnight of the day before the convention and the subsequent nomination of Senator Grim is history. The circumstances attending the Munson retirement bred all sorts of suspicions, and appeared to warrant the general conclusion that a despicable trick involving a disreputable deal and intended to demoralize the Democratic party and make easy the election to the Governorship of a tool of the Penrose-Contractors Machine had been perpetrated.

The Munson Fiasco.

The facts of the Munson fiasco, so far as they were supposed to discredit any one prominent in the Democratic organization, are now known. Painstaking investigation has been made. Nothing has been taken for granted, and all of the circumstantial evidence pointing to duplicity and double-dealing and involving one or more Democrats present at Allentown during convention week, has been proven to be worthless as a means of connecting the Democratic leaders in question with the unexpected declination of Mr. Munson on the eve of the Democratic State Convention. If Mr. Munson was involved in any deal and impelled by any reasons other than those he has publicly stated for his action, it was not with the knowledge of any member of the Democratic organization, and none of whom were in any way responsible for the panic into which the delegates to the Allentown Convention were thrown on the eve of the gathering.

Immediately following the primary elections when it became known that the efforts of Berry and Grim to capture a majority of the delegates to the State Convention had failed, formal pledges of enough delegates to nominate Mr. Munson were made to the Williamsport man. He was given these pledges and assured of the support not only of Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall, Chas. P. Donnelly and their friends, but many other Democrats who had long been known as being out of harmony with the Guffey organization without the request of a single pledge involving the conduct of the campaign or the office of Governor should he win the election. His nomination was assured, and he was consulted regarding the platform on which he was to make the campaign, responding with a series of planks covering questions of State government.

The impression that Mr. Munson was a politician was never justified. He was not. He was a good mixer and an effective personal campaigner, but with little or no knowledge of larger than county politics except that obtained in his canvass of the State in 1909.

The week before the Allentown Convention Munson was impressed by an interview credited to ex-State Treasurer Berry in which the latter was quoted as stating that if he did not get the Democratic nomination for Governor he would run as an independent candidate. That worried Munson. He figured that it was useless for him to take the Democratic nomination if Berry ran independently, as that would divide the Democratic and independent vote, and insure the election of the Penrose candidate.

Munson Deals for Berry

And so Mr. Munson decided to play politics. He came to Philadelphia and conferred with Mr. Berry's manager, Mr. Bonniwell, urging that gentleman to get his man to stop running for Governor and consent to accept a place on the Democratic ticket for Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Bonniwell doubted Mr. Munson's ability to get Mr. Berry the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor, but Mr. Munson said he would try.

Senator Hall, of Elk, was in Philadelphia, and Mr. Munson conferred with him, pleading that Mr. Berry be slated for Lieutenant-Governor. Senator Hall refused to agree to such a proposition. He said that nothing was agreed upon except that Munson was to be nominated for Governor, and it would be up to the Allentown Convention to decide upon the balance of the ticket. Mr. Munson appeared to assume that Senator Hall could handle the office any way he wanted, and threatened to refuse to accept the nomination for Governor if Senator Hall would not agree to favor Berry for Lieutenant-Governor.

To this Hall replied that Munson did not dare take such a step, that the delegates had been elected, and he had promised to accept if nominated, and that he could not get out of the race on the pretext that he would not run if Berry was not on the ticket with him as the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor.

Munson Threatens

Mr. Munson was much wrought up over the situation. The weather was hot, and shortly after the interview with Senator Hall and while on his way to a train he was attacked by vertigo, and became so dizzy that he had to be helped to his seat in a parlor car. His illness continued and did not respond rapidly to the treatment of a Williamsport physician. He left Philadelphia after this conference with Senator Hall on the Thursday previous to the Allentown Convention.

On the following Sunday he again met Senator Hall by appointment at Atlantic City and informed him that the condition of his health worried him; that in addition some private affairs had taken a turn that made it inadvisable for him to continue in politics, and he wished to be relieved of his promise to accept the Democratic nomination for Governor. He asked Hall to acquiesce in this decision and look elsewhere for a candidate for Governor.

Senator Hall positively declined to be a party to any such arrangement, and urged Mr. Munson to hold fast to his original position—that if nominated he would accept the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson persisted and Senator Hall insisted that it was unfair to the Democrats of the State that Mr. Munson should think of declining at that late date. He told him he was unnecessarily alarmed about his health and that he would be all right after a few weeks' rest.

At this point in the interview a close relative of Mr. Munson's who had been present during the interview appealed to Senator Hall to accept the declination of Mr. Munson, urging that to force him to make the campaign for Governor was driving him to the grave, the claim being made by this person, who was in a position to know, that it was a fact that Mr. Munson's physical condition was such that any undue excitement was likely to result fatally.

Senator Hall finally agreed that if this was true it was a valid excuse for the position Mr. Munson sought to assume, but stated that it was his judgment that Mr. Munson could not afford to take it without consulting one of the best-known physicians in the country and having him certify after an examination that it would jeopardize his life to make the campaign for the Governorship.

Mr. Munson agreed to this, and Senator Hall parted with him with the understanding that he was to go to Allentown on Monday while Munson was to visit Dr. Musser in Philadelphia, and communicate the result of the medical examination to Hall at Allentown on Tuesday morning, and that failing to secure the physician's certificate justifying his position he would accept the nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson visited Dr. Musser on Monday afternoon of convention week, with the result already known that he advised him that his condition was such that it would be dangerous for him to engage in any work involving great effort or excitement.

Munson Gets Out.

Mr. Munson reached Williamsport on Monday evening. He immediately wrote and mailed to N. M. Edwards, who was in Allentown, the letter declining the nomination as well as a brief note to Senator Hall telling him to see Mr. Edwards, who would show him the letter fully explaining his position.

Senator Hall received his short note from Munson early Tuesday morning. He immediately sought Edwards, who declared he had received no letter. Repeatedly during the day Hall sought Edwards, and as repeatedly Edwards visited the hotel desk and the post office inquiring for the expected letter. Edwards was in thorough ignorance of the contents of the letter, and although he was supposed to be Munson's closest political friend, had received no information of the attitude assumed by Munson.

Late on Tuesday evening a clerk in the Allentown hotel at which Edwards was stopping discovered that there was a letter for Edwards, that the letter had been there all day, but that another clerk had misplaced it in the letter case, which accounted for the fact that it was not delivered earlier.

The rest is history. Panic followed in the ranks of the leaders and their friends. Futile efforts, which consumed several hours, were made through the telephone to induce Munson to recall his letter of declination. It was midnight of the day before the convention when this effort was abandoned because Munson persisted in his refusal to run, and the hasty decision of the Democrats who favored Munson to turn to Grim and nominate him was made.

As stated it was close to midnight on the day before the Allentown convention when the final word was received from Munson that he would not accept the nomination. His letter to N. M. Edwards had been presented to the party leaders shortly after six o'clock, the intervening time until close to midnight being consumed in personal appeals over the telephone to Munson, to withdraw his letter, Colonel Guffey, Senator Dewalt, Chas. P. Donnelly and all of the other leaders on the ground participating in this fruitless effort.

Guffey Favored Berry.

Shortly before midnight there was a conference in Colonel Guffey's room. It was participated in not only by the close friends of Colonel Guffey, who had long been identified with his control of the Democratic organization, but by a number of others. Chas. P. Donnelly, of Philadelphia, suggested Congressman Palmer, of Stroudsburg, as the candidate for Governor and practically every man present agreed that he should be urged to take the place. Mr. Palmer, however, when urged, pointed to the fact that he was already a candidate for re-election to Congress and would not consent to run for Governor. Other names were canvassed, including those of both Berry and Grim. Of all the others considered none was at or near Allentown and it being doubtful that any of them would accept and the convention being only a few hours off the choice finally narrowed down to Berry and Grim, both of whom were candidates and both being in Allentown. Several present who had been opposed to the nomination of Berry suggested taking him, urging that this plan would remove the natural suspicion so apparent under all of the circumstances, that the name of Munson had only been used to trick the voters and that his nomination was never seriously considered by Colonel Guffey and his friends.

Colonel Guffey was inclined to agree to this and said he would if the others took the same view. They did not. Discussion followed of the original objection to Berry on account of the stories of his financial transactions with Colonel Guffey and the Harrisburg Trust Company while filling the office of State Treasurer, and it was finally decided to urge the nomination of Senator Grim, who was not present during any part of the discussion and who did not know of the decision reached until after it had been made.

Com. vs. Wm. Ford, charged with rape and adultery, continued as crime first charged is to be tried in an over and terminer court.

Camp a Thing of the Past.

Camp Notes

Two guardsmen were injured, on Friday, one seriously as the Eighteenth infantry was breaking camp. Quartermaster Sergeant Walter Jeffries, of Company M, Eighteenth regiment, of Pittsburg, fell from the large pole of a mess tent, striking on his head. He sustained concussion of the brain.

Private Elmer Finnegan, company D of the same regiment, was shot in the wrist by a cartridge which he had accidentally thrown into a fire of burning rubbish. The bullet cut a gash fully eight inches long. Both men were taken home with the regiment.

A daring rescue was made by Captain Levering and First Lieutenant Brown, of Company H, of the First Regiment, in town Friday morning, when a horse attached to a carriage in which two women were riding became frightened and ran away. The Philadelphia officers were on a trolley car and realizing the danger of the occupants, leaped from the car and ran in front of the frightened horse and caught it by the bridle.

Following the custom to make good all damages to property in the vicinity of Gettysburg caused by the maneuvers, an Adjustment Board, composed of Lieutenant Colonel William Jeffries, Sr., Judge Advocate Howard A. Davis and Lieutenant Colonel Ezra Ripple, made a tour of the maneuver grounds Friday afternoon and made cash payments to farmers whose property had in any way been mutilated.

The Tent City was declared to be more sanitary than ever before and the food to be absolutely clean and wholesome. As for the culinary artists, all of whom are enlisted men, nothing but praise is due. The Guardsmen in Co A of the Third Regiment believed at first that their food was prepared better than that served the other Guardsmen, because Cooke Bagley and Bolker are cooks at the Bellevue-Stratford, in Philadelphia. A canvass of the cooks in other companies, however, show that almost every one of them is an "Oscar" in some leading hotel or restaurant.

On Saturday there were reports to the effect that on the previous day there was nearly a mutiny among officers and men of the First Brigade but these reports have been denied by the Commander of Brigade and Division. The alleged mutiny was said to have been on account of hard work of camp. There is no question that an encampment is no longer a picnic but one of work.

Officers and men were pleased over the prospect of soon receiving their pay for the encampment. Brigadier General Stewart, adjutant general and chief of staff, who is acting paymaster for the division, has everything in shape, and if the State Treasurer at Harrisburg acts promptly on the pay warrants, the troops of the entire division will receive their money this week. Formerly the men had to wait until nearly Christmas before receiving their pay for the summer camp, but for several years past, under the new system put into operation by General Stewart, payments will be made promptly. The pay roll will average $120,000.

Struck by Engine.

Charles Byers, a young married man of near New Oxford, escaped death when struck by a W. M. R. R. engine last Saturday evening, and was thrown 50 feet. He was found by Joseph Carbaugh and Amos Kuhn in an unconscious condition and taken to his home. It is supposed he sat down on one of the rails and fell asleep when he was struck by engine. Dr. Seaks of New Oxford, found his right arm broken in two places and his head and face lacerated.

CROSSING THE DIVIDE

SUDDEN DEATH IN THE BU-
CHANAN VALLEY.Death Comes Suddenly to Well Known Persons and With Halting Step to Others.

JEREMIE ELIZABETH COLE, youngest daughter of John F. and Jennie G.
Cole, died on Thursday morning at 3.35 unexpectedly to all her friends.
She had been slightly indisposed from Monday, but there was nothing perceptible to indicate danger of a fatal illness. She was up and walking about, and on Wednesday evening sat at the table and partook of a light supper, but grew worse as the night advanced and at four in the morning showed alarming symptoms of congestion of the lungs and only lived four hours and a half. The entire community was shocked as it was not known that she was ill. She was interred in St. Ignace cemetery on Saturday at 3 p. m. The bearers were Blanche Irwin, Esther Dillon, Evelyn
Hall and Bertha Hall. She is survived by her parents, John F. and Jennie
G. Cole, three brothers, Raymond,
Charles and Earl, and five sisters,
Misses Genevieve, Evelyn, Ethel, Mary and Loretta Cole. She has but "Gone home by a shorter way." Gone to rejoice in her early found bliss. Gone from all of this world's trials and struggles, and suffering. God sparing the tender feet lest they be bruised, and torn by the brambles and thorns, that beset life's longer journey, to a home of bliss beyond. The Savior has led her through beautiful paths of light and love into her sure reward of eternal happiness in heaven.
In robes emblematic of purity we robe her and placed garlands of nature's fairest flowers as decorations as a preparation for her last resting place and left in God's care.

Notice.

To my many friends, the Farmers of Adams County.

I desire to call your attention to fact that I am fully entitled to practice veterinary medicine under Act of 1909 and that the recent case against me ignored that act and proceeded against me for violating Acts of 1899, 1895 and 1905 regarding veterinary registration.
 The case having been dismissed it should be kept in mind that trouble was sought to be made me on a technicality, and not by reason of any want of skill in my profession or complaint among my patrons, for such has never been the case. It is up to you decide whether you will permit a technicality to take from me any of the fruits of a twenty seven years successful practice.

Sincerely yours

DR. E. D. HUDSON.
